 7. To crush; to overbear; to deprecate.
 That Hector was in certainty of death, and depressed with the conscience of an ill cause: if you will not grant the first of these will sink the spirit of a hero, you'll at least allow the second may. Pope.
 8. To lessen; to diminish.
 They catch at all opportunities of ruining our trade, and sinking the figure which we make. Addison on the War.
 I mean not that we should sink our figure out of covetousness, and deny ourselves the proper conveniences of our station, only that we may lay up a superfluous treasure. Rogers.
 9. To make to decline.
 Thy cruel and unnatural lust of power
 Has sunk thy father more than all his years,
 And made him wither in a green old age. Rever.
 To labour for a sunk corrupted state. Lyttleton.
 10. To suppress; to conceal; to intercept.
 If sent with ready money to buy any thing, and you happen to be out of pocket, sink the money, and take up the goods on account. Swift's Rules to Servants.
 SINK. n. f. [sencan, Saxon.]
 1. A drains or takes.
 Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,
 Who is the sink of th' body. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
 Bad

SIN

- Bad humours gather to a bile, or as divers kennels flow to one sinke, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayward.
 Gathering more silt than any sinke in town. Granville.
 Returning home at night, you'll find the sinke
 Strike your offended sense with double stink. Swift.
 2. Any place where corruption is gathered.
 What sinke of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
 Mad after change, and desperate in their states,
 Wearied and gall'd with their necessities,
 Durst have thought it? Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
 Our soul, whose country's heav'n and God her father,
 Into this world, corruption's sinke, is sent;
 Yet so much in her travail the doth gather,
 That she returns home wiser than she went.
 SINKLESS. adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.
 Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know,
 What nearer might concern him, how this world
 Of heav'n, and earth conspicuous, first began. Milton.
 At that tasted fruit,
 The sun, as from Thyletan banquet, turn'd
 His courtes, else how had the world
 Inhabited, though sinless, more than now
 Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat?
 Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round
 Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,
 Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou
 Satt'st unappal'd in calm and sinless peace.
 No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane,
 Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance
 Of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas! who should live, if God did this? Rogers.
 SINKLESSNESS. n. f. [from sinless.] Exemption from sin.
 We may the less admire at his gracious condescensions to turne the sinless of whole condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Boyle's Seraphick Love.
 SINKER. n. f. [from sin.] One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.
 Let the boldest sinker take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.
 2. An offender; a criminal.
 Here's that which is too weak to be a sinker, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakespeare's Timon.
 Over the guilty then the fury shakes
 The sounding whip, and brandishes her flakes,
 And the pale sinker with her sisters takes. Dryden's Æn.
 Thither, where sinkers may have rest, I go,
 Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphick glow.
 Whether the charmer sinker it or faint it,
 If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.
 SINKOFFERING. n. f. [from sin and offering.] An expiation or sacrifice for sin.
 The flesh of the bullock shalt thou burn without the camp:
 it is a sinkoffering. Ex. xxix. 14.
 SINKOPPER, or Sinkple. n. f. A species of earth; ruddle. Ans.
 To SINKUATE. v. a. [from sinu, Latin.] To bend in and out.
 Another was very perfect, somewhat less with the margin,
 and more sinuated. Woodward on Poissins.
 SINKUATION. n. f. [from sinuate.] A bending in and out.
 The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractus, or sinuations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 SINKUOUS. adj. [from sinuosa, French, from sinus, Latin.] Bending in and out.
 Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous. Bacon.
 These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
 Streaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 In the dissections of horses, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereat the gall is usually seated in quadrupeds, I discover an hollow, long, and membranous substance.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 SINUS. n. f. [Latin.]
 1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land.
 Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea:
 whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinus, might have had such an original.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 2. Any fold or opening.
 To SIP. v. a. [Saxon, sippan, Dutch.]
 1. To drink by small draughts; to take at one apportion of the cup to the mouth no more than the mouth will contain.
 Sort yielding minds to water glide away,
 And sip with nymphs their elemental tea. Pope.

SIN

2. To drink in small quantities.
 Find out the peaceful hermitage;
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may fit and rightly spell
 Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.
 3. To drink out of.
 The winged nation o'er the forest flies:
 Then stooping on the meads and leafy bow'rs,
 They skim the floods and sip the purple flow'rs. Dryden.
 To SIP. v. n. To drink a small quantity.
 She rais'd it to her mouth with sober grace;
 Then sipping, offer'd to the next. Dryden's Æn.
 SIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.
 Her face o' fire
 With labour, and the thing she took to quench it
 She would to each one sip. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
 One sip of this
 Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
 Beyond the bliss of dreams. Milton.
 SIPHON. n. f. [from siphon, Lat. siphon, Fr.] A pipe through which liquors are conveyed.
 Beneath th' incessant weeping of these drains
 I see the rocky siphon stretch'd immense,
 The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
 Of flint compacted clay. Thomson's Autumn.
 SIPPER. n. f. [from sip.] One that sips.
 SIPPERET. n. f. [from sip.] A small cup.
 SIR. n. f. [Sire, Fr. seigneur, Ital. senior, Spanish; senior, Latin.]
 1. The word of respect in compellation.
 Speak on, sir,
 I dare your worth objections: if I blush,
 It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
 But, sir, be fudden in the execution;
 Withal obdurate; do not let him plead. Shakespeare's R. III.
Sir king,
 This man is better than the man he flew. Shakespeare.
 At a banquet the ambassador desired the wife men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable, that he might report to his king, which they did: only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, sir, let it not displease you; why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, report to your lord, that there are that can hold their peace. Bacon's Apophthegms.
 2. The title of a knight or baronet. This word was anciently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.
 Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part. Bacon's War with Spain.
 The court forsakes him, and sir Balaam hangs. Pope.
 3. It is sometimes used for man.
 I have adventur'd
 To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgments,
 In the election of a sir to rare. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 4. A title given to the loin of beef, which one of our kings knighted in a fit of good humour.
 He lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a
sir-loin which was served up.
 And the strong table groans
 Beneath the smothering sir-loin, stretch'd immense
 From side to side. Thomson's Autumn.
 It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a lack. Swift.
 SIRE. n. f. [Sire, French; senior, Latin.]
 1. A father, in poetry.
 He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
 And raise his issue like a loving sire. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 Towards father towards, and base things sire the base. Shak.
 A virgin is his mother, but his sire
 The pow'r of the Most High. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 And now I leave the true and just supports
 Of legal princes and of honest courts,
 Whose sires, great part'ners in my father's cares,
 Saluted their young king at Hebron crown'd. Prior.
 Whether his hoary sire he spies,
 While thousand grateful thoughts arise,
 Or meets his spouse's kinder eye. Pope's Chorus to Brutus.
 2. It is used in common speech of beasts: as, the horse had a good sire, but a bad dam.
 3. It is used in composition: as, grand-sire, great-grand-sire.
 SIREN. n. f. [Latin.] A goddess who enticed men by singing and deceived them; any mischievous enticer.
 Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
 To drown me in thy siren's flood of tears:
 Sing, siren, to thyself, and I will dote;
 Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
 And as a-bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakespeare.
 SIRENISIS. n. f. [from siren.] An inflammation of the brain and its membrane, through an excessive heat of the sun. Diels.

SIT

1. To rest upon the buttocks.
 There were flays on each side of the sitting place. Chron.
 He sat for aims at the beautiful gate. Acts iii. 10.
 Their wives do sit beside them carding wool. Moy's Virgil.
 Aloft in awful state,
 The godlike hero sat
 On his imperial throne. Dryden.
 2. To perch.
 All new fashions be pleasant to me,
 I will have them whether I thrive or thee,
 Now I am a frisker, all men on me look,
 What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
 What do I care if all the world me fail,
 I will have a garment reach to my tail. Bourd.
 3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.
 Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? Num.
 Why sit we here each other viewing idly. Milton.
 4. To be in any local position.
 I should be still Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind:
 Peering in maps for ports. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
 Those
 Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milton.
 The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair. A. Phillips.
 5. To rest as a weight or burthen.
 Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shakespeare's Othello.
 When God lets loose upon us a sickness, if we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy on us. Taylor.
 To tofs and tings, and to be restless, only galls our sores, and makes the burden that is upon us sit more uneasily. Tillotson.
 Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
 And horror, heavy sat on every mind. Dryden.
 Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the uneasiness that sits to heavy upon us. Locke.
 6. To settle; to abide.
 That this new comer shame,
 There sit not and reproach us. Milton.
 When Thetis bluish'd, in purple not her own,
 And from her face the breathing winds were blown;
 A sudden silence sat upon the sea,
 And sweeping oars, with struggling, urg'd their way. Dryd.
 He to the void advanc'd his pace,
 Pale horror sat on each Arcadian face. Dryden.
 7. To brood; to incubate.
 As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days. Ser. xvii. 11.
 The egg laid and fever'd from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quickening heat when the sitteth. Bacon's Natural History.
 She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison.
 8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.
 This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think. Shakespeare's Henry IV. knows.
 By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways
 I met this crown; and I myself know well,
 How trouble me it sits upon my head;
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakespeare's Your preferring that to all other considerations does, in the eyes of all men, sit well upon you. Locke.
 9. To be placed in order to be painted.
 One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome. Garth.
 10. To be in any situation or condition.
 As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sits at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sits at great usury. Bacon.
 Suppose all the church-lands were thrown up to the laity;
 would the tenants sit easier in their rents than now? Swift.
 11. To be fixed, as an assembly.
 12. To be placed at the table.
 Whether is greater he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth?
Luke xxii. 27.
 13. To exercise authority.
 The judgment shall sit, and take away his dominion. Dan.
 Affix are ye that sit in judgment. Judges v. 10.
 Down to the golden Cherfoneuse, or where The Persian in Echatan sate. Milton.
 One council sits upon life and death, the other is for taxes, and a third for the distributions of justice. Addison.
 Assent, ye fair ones, who in judgment sit,
 Your ancient empire over love and wit. Rowe.
 14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.
 Three hundred and twenty men sat in council daily. 1 Mac.
 15. To sit down. Down is little more than emphatical.
 Go and sit down to meat. Luke xvii. 7.

SIT

When we sit down to our meal, we need not suspect the intrusion of armed uninvited guests. Dray of Pity.
 16. To sit down. To begin a siege.
 Nor would the enemy have sate down before it, till they had done their business in all other places. Clarendon.
 17. To sit down. To rest; to cease satisfied.
 Here we cannot sit down, but still proceed in our search, and look higher for a support. Rogers.
 18. To sit down. To settle; to fix abode.
 From besides Tanais, the Goths, Huns, and Getes sate down. Spenser.
 19. To sit out. To be without engagement or employment.
 They are glad, rather than sit out, to play very small game, and to make use of arguments, such as will not prove a bare inexperience. Bp. Sanderson's Judgment.
 20. To sit up. To rise from lying to sitting.
 He that was dead, sate up, and began to speak. Luke vii.
 21. To sit up. To watch; not to go to bed.
 Be courtly,
 And entertain, and feast, fit up, and revel;
 Call all the great, the fair and spirited dames
 Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
 Of freedom. Ben. Johnson.
 Some fit up late at winter-fires, and sit
 Their sharp-edg'd tools. Moy.
 Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night. Locke.
 1. To keep the seat upon.
 Hardly the mule can fit the head-strong horse,
 Nor would they, if he could, check his impetuous force. Prior.
 2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows sit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.
 The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
 Would shut the book, and fit him down and die. Shakespeare.
 He came to visit us, and calling for a chair, sat him down, and we sat down with him. Bacon.
 Thus seated,
 But not at rest or ease of mind,
 They sat them down to weep. Milton.
 3. To be settled to do business.
 The court was sat before Sir Roger came, but the justices made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison.
 SITE. n. f. [from situs, Latin.]
 1. Situation; local position.
 The city itself he strongly fortifies,
 Three sides by site well defended has. Fairfax.
 Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.
 If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle. 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart. Bentley.
 Before my view appear'd a structure fair,
 Its site uncertain if on earth or air. Pope.
 2. It is taken by Thomson for posture, or situation of a thing with respect to itself; but improperly.
 And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
 In melancholy site, with head declin'd,
 And love-defected eyes. Thomson's Spring.
 A hard knob growing under the saddle. Farrar's Dict.
 SITE. adv. [from situs, Latin.] Since; seeing that. Obsolete.
 What ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom notwithstanding, site it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intombed. Hooker.
 Not I, my lord; site true nobility
 Warrants these words in princely courtesie. Shakespeare.
 I thank you for this profit, and from hence
 I'll love no friend, site love breeds such offence. Shakespeare.
 SITE. n. f. [from situs, Latin.] This word is very variously written by authors: I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple and most agreeable to etymology. The instrument of mowing; a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.
 Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
 Live registred upon our brazen tombs;
 And then grace us in the disgrace of death;
 When, spite of cormorant-devouring time,
 Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
 That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge;
 And make us heirs of all eternity. Shakespeare.
 Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged with a scythe, and an hour-glass. Peacham on Drawing.
 There rude impetuous rage does storm and fret;
 And there, as matter of this murdering brood,
 Swinging a huge scythe, stands impartial death,
 With endless business almost out of breath. Craighead.
 The milk-maid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scythe. Milton.

SIX

The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
 But useless lances into scythes shall bend,
 And the broad falchion in a plough-share end. Pope.
 Grav'd o'er their seats the form of time was found,
 His scythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound. Pope.
 But, Stella, say, what evil tongue
 Reports you are no longer young?
 That time sits with his scythe to mow
 Where erst fat Cupid with his bow.
 Echo no more returns the cheerful sound
 Of sharpening scythes. Thomson's Summer.
 SIT. adv. [Now contracted to since. See SINCE.] Since, in latter times.
 This over-running and waisting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sit have afflicted that land. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 SIT. n. f. Times. Spenser.
 SIT. adv. Since. Spenser.
 SIT. n. f. [from situs.]
 1. One that sits.
 The Turks are great sitters, and seldom walk; whereby they sweat less, and need bathing more. Bacon.
 2. A bird that broods.
 The oldest hens are reckoned the best sitters; and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 SITTING. n. f. [from situs.]
 1. The posture of sitting on a seat.
 2. The act of resting on a seat.
 Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine up rising. Psal.
 3. A time at which one exhibits himself to a painter.
 Few good pictures have been finished at one sitting; neither can a good play be produced at a heat. Dryden.
 4. A meeting of an assembly.
 I'll write you down;
 The which shall point you forth at every sitting,
 What you must say. Shakespeare.
 I wish it may be at that sitting concluded, unless the necessity of the time press it. Bacon.
 5. A course of study uninterrupted.
 For the understanding of any one of St. Paul's epistles, I read it all through at one sitting. Locke.
 6. A time for which one sits without rising.
 What more than madnes reigns,
 When one short sitting many hundred drains,
 And not enough is left him to supply
 Board-wages, or a footman's livery. Dryden.
 7. Incubation.
 Whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male bird takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough, and amuses her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison.
 SIT. adv. [from situs, Latin.]
 1. Placed with respect to any thing else.
 He was resolved to chuse a war, rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being so great and opulent a duchy, and situate so opportunely to annoy England. Bacon.
 Within a trading town they long abide,
 Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden's Nani's Priest.
 The eye is a part so artificially composed, and commodiously situate, as nothing can be contrived better for use, ornament, or security. Ray on the Creation.

 SIXTY. n. f. [perhaps rather six, from incisa, Latin; or from assis, French.] Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.
 I ever narrated my friends,
 With all the six that verity
 Would without lapsing suffer. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 If any decayed ship be new made, it is more fit to make her a six less than bigger. Raleigh.
 The distance judg'd for shot of every six,
 The muskets touch, the pond'rous ball expires. Dryden.
 Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger six, that are more remote. Locke.
 The martial goddess,
 Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and six,
 With speed divine, from direct to direct flies;
 She bids the mariners prepare to stand. Pope's Odyssey.
 2. [from six, old French.] A settled quantity. In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table: whence they say a sixer at Cambridge.
 'Tis not in thee
 To cut off my train, to scant my sixes,
 And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 3. Figurative bulk; condition.
 This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less six and quality. L'Estrange.
 They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, intended for the middling or lower six of people. Swift.
 4. [from six, Italian.] Any viscous or glutinous substance.
 TO SIZ. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To adjust, or arrange according to siz.
 The foxes weigh the geese they carry,
 And ere they venture on a stream,
 Know how to siz themselves and them. Hudibras.
 Two troops so match'd were never to be found,
 Such bodies built for strength, of equal age,
 In stature siz'd. Dryden's Knights Tale.
 2. [from siz, Italian.] To settle; to fix.
 There was a statute for dispersing the standard of the exchequer throughout England; thereby to siz weights and measures. Bacon's Henry VII.
 3. To cover with glutinous matter; to besmear with siz.
 Siz'd. adj. [from siz.] Having a particular magnitude.
 What my love is, proof hath made you know,
 And as my love is siz'd, my fear is so. Shakespeare.

SKE

That will be a great horse to a Welshman, which is but a small one to a Fleming; having, from the different breed of their countries, taken several fixed ideas, to which they compare their great and their little. Locke.
 SKE. adj. [from ske.] Reasonably bulky.
 He should be purged, sweated, vomited, and starved, till he come to a skeable bulk. Arbutnot.
 SIZER. or Servitor. n. f. A certain rank of students in the universities.

The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the septic believes nothing. Watt's Logic.
SKETCH. n. f. [from sketch.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the septic and wavering minds, and so prevent us that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. Bentley.
SKETCH. n. f. [from sketch.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I laid by my natural diffidence and septicism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. Dryden.
SKETCH. n. f. [from sketch.] An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. Addison.
 As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
 Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd, Pope.

TO SKETCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To draw, by tracing the outline.
 If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketch'd out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. Watt's Logic.

2. To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.
 The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketch'd, and which every man must finish for himself. Dryden's Duplej.

SKETCH. n. f. [from sketch.] A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweet breeds and collars were with skewers prick'd
 About the sides. Dryden's Iliad.

From his rug the skewer he takes,
 And on the stick ten equal notches makes. Swift.

I once may overlook,
 A skewer sent to table by my cook. King.

Send up meat well stuck with skewers, to make it look round;
 and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handsome. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

TO SKEWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with skewers.

SKIFF. n. f. [from skiff.] A small light boat.
 If in two skiffs of cork, a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth not move, the other standing still, but both their into each other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
 Chock'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train. Dryden.

On Garway cliffs
 A savage race by shipwreck fed,
 Lie waiting for the founder'd skiffs,
 And strip the bodies of the dead. Swift.

SKILLFUL. adj. [from skill and full.] Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dexterous; able.

His father was a man of Tyre, skillful to work in gold and silver. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

They shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skillful of lamentation, to wailing. Amos v. 16.

Will Vaser is skillful at finding out the ridiculous side of a thing, and placing it in a new light. Tatler.

Say, Stella, feel you no content,
 Reflecting on a life well spent;
 Your skillful hand employ'd to save Despairing wretches from the grave:

And then supporting with your store
 Those whom you drag'd from death before. Swift.

Instructors should not only be skillful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

SKILLFULLY. adv. [from skillful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in fit distance, with much fury, but with fury skillfully guided, he ran upon me. Sidney.

One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of, than ten thousand others that be ignorant. Watts.

2. To skill, Ilandick, signifies to distinguish. To differ; to make difference; to interject; to matter. Not in use.

Whether the commandments of God in scripture be general or special, it skilleth not.

What skill it, if a bag of stones or gold
 About thy neck do drown thee? raise thy head,
 Take stars for money; stars not to be told,
 By any art: yet to be purchas'd.
 None is so wastful as the scraping dame,
 She loathes three for one; her soul, rest, fame. Herbert.

He intending not to make a summer business of it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until he had recovered France, it skill'd in the world, who he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter. Bacon.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Knowing; dextrous; acquainted with.

Of these nor skilled nor studious. Milton.

Moses, in all the Egyptian arts was skill'd,
 When heav'nly power that chosen vessel fill'd.
 He must be very little skill'd in the world, who thinks that a voluble tongue shall accompany only a good understanding. Locke.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Wanting art. Not in use.

1. Nor have I seen
 More that I may call men than you:
 How features are abroad I'm skill'd of. Shakespeare.

Jealously what might befall your travel,
 Being skill'd in these parts; which to a stranger Unguided and unfriended, often prove Rough and unprofitable. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
 Mithapen in the conduct of them both,
 Like powder in a skill'd soldier's flask
 Is set on fire. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

SKILLET. n. f. [from skillet.] A small kettle or boiler.

When light-wing'd toys
 Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dullness
 My speculative and offic'd instruments,
 Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm,
 And all indign and base adversities
 Make head against my estimation.
 Break all the wax, and in a kettle or skillet set it over a soft fire. Mortimer's Epitaph.

SKULL. n. f. [ſkulla, Iſlandick; ſkatti, Iſlandick, a head.]

1. The bone that incloſes the head: it is made up of ſeveral pieces, which, being joined together, form a conſiderable cavity, which contain the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigneſs of the brain. Its figure is round, and a little depreſſed on its ſides. The ſeveral pieces, of which the ſkull is compoſed, are joined together by futures, which makes it leſs apt to break: theſe pieces or bones are fix proper and two common, and each is made up of two tables, or laminae, between which there is a thin and ſpongy ſubſtance, made of ſome bony fibres, which come from each lamina, called in Greek ἀπὸς, and in Latin medullarium. In it are a great many veins and arteries, which bring blood for the nourishment of the bones. The tables are hard and ſolid, becauſe in them the fibres of the bones are cloſe to one another. The diploe is ſoft, becauſe the bony fibres are at a greater diſtance from one another. The external lamina is ſmooth, and covered with the pericranium: the internal is likewiſe ſmooth;
but on it are ſeveral furrows, made by the pulſe of the arteries of the dura mater, whilſt the cranium was ſoft and yielding. Quincy.

Some lay in dead mens skulls; and in thoſe holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in ſcorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakeſp. R. III.

With reſtoubled frokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd ſkull within the brains. Dryden.

2. [See SCOLE, Saxon, a company.] A ſkual. See SKULL.

To SLACK. v. a.

To SLACKEN. v. a.

1. To looſen; to make leſs tight.

Ah generous youth, that wiſh forbear;
Slack all thy fails, and fear to come. Dryden.

Had Ajax been employ'd, our ſlacken'd fails
Had ſtill at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulſes beat, and lungs reſpire;
This holds the ſinews like a bridle's reins,
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn or ſtop, as the them ſlacks or ſtrains. Davies.

3. To eaſe; to mitigate. Philips ſeems to have uſed it by miſtake for ſlake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a ſtrict rule of duty, always reſtrained by ſharp penalties from lewd behaviour, ſo ſoon as they come thither, where they ſee laws more ſlackly tended, and the hard reſtraint, which they were uſed unto, now ſlack'd, they grow more looſe. Spencer.

If there be cure or charm
To reſpite or deceive, or ſlack the pain
Of this ill manſion. Milton's Paradife Loſt.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons ſome luſcious plant
Allow'd, that poor helpleſs man-might ſlack
His preſent thirſt, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerneſs.

My guards
Are you, great pow'rs, and th' unbated ſtrength
Of a firm conſcience; which ſhall arm each ſtep
Ta'en for the ſtate, and teach me ſlack no pace. Ben. Jonſon.

With ſuch delay well pleas'd, they ſlack their courſe. Milt.

5. To cauſe to be remitted.

You may ſooner by imagination quicken or ſlack a motion, than raiſe or ceaſe it; as it is eaſier to make a dog go ſlower than make him ſtand ſtill. Bacon.

This doctrine muſt ſuperſede and ſlacken all induſtry and endeavour, which is the loweſt degree of that which hath been promiſed to be accepted by Chriſt; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wife man's cumberſome, if not ſnare; more apt
To ſlacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praiſe. Milton.

SLA

- SLACKNESS. n. f. [from slack.]
 1. Looseness; not tightness.
 2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.
 It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted. Hooker.
 These thy offices,
 So rarely kind, are as interpreters
 Of my behind-hand slackness. Shak. Winter's Tale.
 From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
 Who should better hold his place
 By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
 3. Want of tendency.
 When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected. Sharp's Surgery.
 4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.
 Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy. Brerewood.
 SLAG. n. f. The dross or recrement of metal.
 Not only the calces but the glass of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass or slag of copper. Boyle.
 SLAKE. n. f. A weaver's reed. Ansforth.
 SLAIN. The participle passive of slay.
 The slain of the Lord shall be many. Jf. lxvi. 16.
 The king grew vain,
 Fought all his battles o'er again;
 And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain. Dryden.
 TO SLAKE. v. a. [from sluck, Skimmer; from slack, Islandick, to quench, Mr. Lye.]
 1. To quench; to extinguish.
 He did always strive Himself with fables to heal for to restore,
 And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore. Fa. Queen.
 If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
 And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
 It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shak. H.VI.
 She with her cold hand slakes
 His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Craibaru.
 From Julius' head
 A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fed:
 Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
 To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair. Dryden.
 The fragrant fruit from bending branches shake,
 And with the crystal stream their thirst at pleasure slake.
Blackmore's Creation.
 Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase;
 Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Addis. Cato.
 2. It is used of lime, so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime be to powder or quench it.
 That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. Woodward.
 TO SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.] To grow less tense; to be relaxed.
 If she the body's nature did partake,
 Her strength would with the body's strength decay;
 But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
 Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay. Davies.
 TO SLAM. v. a. [from slana, Islandick; schlagen, Dutch.] To slaughter; to crush. A word not used but in low conversation.
 TO SLANDER. v. a. [from slauandrie, French; scandalum, Latin.] To censure falsely; to belie.
 Slander Valentine
 With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent. Shakespeare.
 He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. 2 Sa. xix. 27.
 Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandering it. Whitgift.
 Thou do'st with lies the throne invade,
 By practice harden'd in thy slandering trade;
 Obtending heav'n for what'er ills befall,
 And spurr'ring under specious names thy gall. Dryden.
 Of all her dears the never slandered one,
 But cares not if a thousand are undone. Dryden.
 SLANDER. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. False invective.
 When slanders do not live in tongues;
 When cut-purses come not to throngs. Shak. K. Lear.
 Since that we hear he is in arms,
 We think not so;
 Yet charge the consul with our harms,
 That let him go:
 So in our censure of the state
 We still do wander,
 And make the careful magistrate
 The mark of slander. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
 2. Disgrace; reproach.
 Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
 Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakespeare, R. III.

3. Disreputation; ill name.
 You shall not find me, daughter,
 After the slander of most step-mothers,
 Ill-ey'd unto you. Shakespeare.
 SLANDERER. n. f. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.
 In your servants suffer any offence against yourself rather than against God: endure not that they should be railers or slanderers, tell-tales or fowers of dissension. Taylor.
 Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer. Dryden.
 SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]
 1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.
 What king so strong
 Can tie the gall up in the slandrous tongue? Shakespeare.
 To me belongs
 The care to flout the black of sland'rous tongues:
 Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,
 Thus with vile censure taint my spotless name. Pope.
 2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.
 I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors, with the certain knowledge of their slandrous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.
 We lay these honours on this man,
 To ease ourselves of divers sland'rous loads. Shak. Jnl. Caf.
 As by flattery a man opens his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slandrous misreport he shuts the same to his best friends.
 SLANDEROUSLY. adv. [from slandrous.] Calumniously; with false reproach.
 I may the better satisfy them who object these doubts, and slandrously bark at the courtes which are held against that traitorous earl and his adherents. Spenser on Ireland.
 They did slandrously object,
 How that they durst not hazard to present
 In person their defences. Daniel's Civil War.
 SLANG. The preterite of slang.
 David slang a stone, and smote the Philistine. 1 Sa. xvii.
 SLANK. n. f. An herb. Ansforth.
 SLANT. n. f. adj. [from slangbe, a serpent, Dutch. Skinner.]
 SLANTING. n. f. Oblique; not direct; not perpendicular.
 Late the clouds
 Juffling, or puff'd with winds, rude in their shock,
 Fine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down, Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton's Paradi. Lost.
 The sun round the globe describes th' Equator line,
 By which wife means he can the whole survey
 With a direct or with a slanting ray,
 In the succession of a night and day. Blackmore.
 SLANTLY. adv. [from slant.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.
 SLANTWISE. adv. curially; slope.
 Some maketh a hollowness half a foot deep,
 With fower sets in it, let slantwise asleep. Tusser's Husband.
 SLAP. n. f. [from slap, German.] A blow. Properly with the hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp.
 The laugh, the slap, the jocund curse go round. Thompson.
 SLAP. adv. [from the noun.] With a sudden and violent blow.
 Peg's servants complained; and if they offered to come into the warehouse, then straight went the yard slap over their noddle. Armatrong's History of John Bull.
 TO SLAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a slap.
 Dick, who thus long had passive fat,
 Here stroak'd his chin, and cock'd his hat;
 Then slapp'd his hand upon the board,
 And thus the youth put in his word. Prior.
 SLAPDASH. interj. [from slap and dash.] All at once; as any thing broad falls with a slap into the water, and dashes it about.
 A low word.
 And yet, slapdash, is all again
 In ev'ry finew, nerve, and vein. Prior.
 TO SLASH. v. a. [from slash, to strike, Islandick.]
 1. To cut; to cut with long cuts.
 Daniel, a sprightly twain, that us'd to slash
 The vigorous steeds that drew his lord's calash,
 To Peggy's side inclin'd. King.
 TO SLASH. v. n. To strike at random with a sword; to lay about him.
 The knights with their bright burning blades
 Broke their rude troops, and orders did confound, Hewing and slashing at their idle shades. Fairy Queen.
 Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
 Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook. Pope.
 SLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Cut; wound.
 Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood. Clarendon.
 2. A cut in cloth.
 What! this a sleeve?
 Here's snip and nip, and cut, and flish and slashes. Shakespeare.
 Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

- Distinguish'd slashes deck the great;
 As each excels in birth or state:
 His oylet-holes are more and ampler;
 The king's own body was a fampler. Prior.
 SLATCH. n. f. [A sea term.] The middle part of a rope or cable that hangs down loose. Bailey.
 SLATE. n. f. [from slat: slate is in some counties a crack; or from slate, a tile, French.] A grey fissile stone, easily broken into thin plates, which are used to cover houses, or to write upon.
 A square cannot be so truly drawn upon a slate as it is conceived in the mind. Grew's Cosmol.
 A small piece of a flat slate the ants laid over the hole of their nest, when they forelaw it would rain. Addison's Sp. Cr.
 TO SLATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover the roof; to tile.
 Sonnets and elegies to Chloris,
 Would raise a house about two stories. Swift.
 A lyrick ode would slate.
 SLATER. n. f. [from slate.] One who covers with slates or tiles.
 SLATERN. n. f. [from slat, Swedish.] A woman negligent, not elegant or nice.
 Without the raising of which sum,
 You dare not be so troublesome
 To pinch the *slat*ers black and blue,
 For leaving your work to do. Hudibras.
 We may always observe, that a gossip in politics is a slat-tern in her family. Addison's Freeholder.
 The fellow slat is for the swarthy put,
 And love can make a *slat*tern of a flut. Dryden.
 Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,
 The new-founc'd manteau and the *slat*tern air. Gay.
 SLATY. adj. [from slate.] Having the nature of slate.
 All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long, and parallel to the site of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and, if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, flay, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it. Woodward on Fossils.
 SLAVE. n. f. [from slave, French.] It is said to have its original from the Slavi, or Scalvoniens, subdued and sold by the Venetians. One manac'd to a matter; not a freeman; a dependant.
 The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
 Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
 Improper for a slave. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 Thou elvish mark, abortive, rooting hog!
 Thou that wast seal'd in thy naivety
 The face of nature, and the son of hell. Shakespeare, R. III.
 Of guests he makes them slaves.
 Inhospitality.
 Slaves to our passions we become, and then
 It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.
 The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.
 Perspective a painter must not want; yet without subjecting ourselves to wholly to it, as to become slaves of it. Dryden.
 To-morrow, should we thus expels our friendship,
 Each might receive a slave into his arms:
 This fun perhaps, this morning fun's the last;
 That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty. Addison's Cato.
 TO SLAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.
 Had women been the makers of our laws,
 The men should slave at cards from morn to night. Swift.
 SLAVER. n. f. [from slave, Latin; slava, Islandick.] Spittle running from the mouth; drivell.
 Mathias hath a passage, that a toad communicates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of its mouth, which will not confit with truth. Brown.
 Of all mad creatures, if the leam'd are right,
 It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. Pope.
 TO SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To be smeared with spittle.
 Should I
 Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
 That mount the capitol; join gripes with hands
 Made hard with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakespeare.
 2. To emit spittle.
 Miso came with frowning eyes to deliver a slavering good-morrow to the two ladies.
 Why must he sputter, spawl, and slaver it,
 In vain, against the people's fav'rite? Swift.
 TO SLAVER. v. a. To smear with drivell.
 Twich'd by the slave he mouths it more and more,
 'Till with white froth his gown is slaver'd o'er. Dryden.
 SLAVER. n. f. [from slaver, Dutch; from slaver.] One who cannot hold his spittle; a driveller; an idiot.
 SLAVERY. n. f. [from slave.] Servitude; the condition of a slave; the offices of a slave.
 If my dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy in me, yet no man can think it other than the badge and

- method of slavery, by savage rudeness and importunate obtrusions of violence to have the mist of his error dispell'd. King Charles.
 SLAUGHTER. n. f. [from slaurgt, Saxon, from slagan, plegan, to strike or kill.] Massacre; destruction by the sword.
 Sinful Macduff,
 They were all struck for thee!
 Not for their own demerits, but for mine, Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 Fell slaughter on their souls. Milton.
 On each hand slaughter and gigantick dead.
 The pair you see,
 Now friends below, in close embraces join;
 But when they leave the shady realms of night,
 With mortal heat each other shall pursue:
 What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue? Dryden.
 TO SLAUGHTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To massacre; to slay; to kill with the sword.
 Your cattle is surpris'd, your wife and babes
 Savagely slaughter'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 SLAUGHTERHOUSE. n. f. [from slaughter and house.] House in which beasts are killed for the butcher.
 Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
 Th' uncleanly favour of a slaughterhouse. Shakespeare.
 For I am stiff'd with the smell of sin.
 SLAUGHTERMAN. n. f. [from slaughter and man.] One employed in killing.
 The mad mothers with their howls confus'd
 Do break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,
 At Herod's bloody hunting slaughtermen. Shak. Hen. V.
 Ten chas'd by one,
 Are now each one the slaughterman of twenty. Shakespeare.
 See, thou fight'st against thy countrymen;
 And join't with them, will be thy slaughtermen. Shak. H.VI.
 SLAUGHTEROUS. adj. [from slaughter.] Destructive; murderous.
 I have fupt full with horrors:
 Direness familiar to my slaughterous thoughts
 Cannot once flart me. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 SLA'VISH. adj. [from slave.] Servile; mean; base; dependant.
 A thing
 More slavish did I meet, than answering
 A slave without a knock. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
 You have among you many a purchas'd slave;
 Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
 You use in abject and in slavish part,
 Because you bought them. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
 I believe
 That he, the supreme God, 't whom all things ill
 Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
 Would send a glitt'ring guardian, if need were,
 To keep my life and honour unassail'd.
 Those are the labour'd births of slavish brains;
 Not the effect of poetry, but pains. Denham.
Slavish bards our mutual loves rehearse
 In lying strains and ignominious verse. Prior.
 SLA'VISHLY. adv. [from slavish.] Servilely; meanly.
 SLA'VISHNESS. n. f. [from slavish.] Servility; meanness.
 TO SLAY. v. a. preter slaw; part. pass. slain. [from slahan, Gothic; plegan, Sax. slachten, Dutch; to strike.] To kill; to butcher; to put to death.
 Her father's brother
 Would be her lord; or shall I say her uncle?
 Or he that slaw her brothers and her uncle? Shak. R. III.
 Tyrant, flew thy face:
 If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
 My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakespeare.
 The deadly-handed Clifford slaw my steed. Shak. H. VI.
 I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God. Rev. vi. 2.
 Thus there was killing of young and old, and slaying of virgins and infants. 2 Mac. v. 13.
 Slay and make ready. Gen. xliii. 16.
 Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth the silly one. Joh. v. 2.
 They slaw ten thousand men. Judg. i. 4.
 Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train;
 All much lamented, all in battle slain. Dryden's Ene.
 Abraham
 By blood and battles must his pow'r maintain,
 And slay the monarchs, ere he rule the plain. Prior.
 SLAY'ER. n. f. [from slay.] Killer; murderer; destroyer.
 Witness the guileless blood poured oft on ground;
 The crown'd often slain, the slayer crown'd. Fairy Queen.
 They slaw those that were slayers of their countrymen. Abb.
 The slayer of himself yet saw I there;
 The gore congeal'd was clotter'd in his hair;
 With eyes half clos'd and gaping mouth he lay;
 And grim as when he breath'd his fallen soul away. Dryden.
 SLAVE. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning: slave silk is explained by Gaulman flocus sericus, a lock of silk; and the women fill say slave the silk, for untwist it. Ansforth.

Slaw, adj. [often written slaw.] Weak; wanting substance. This seems to be of the same race with slaw or from to slay.

SLED, n. f. [slod, Danish; sladd, Dutch.] A carriage drawn without wheels.

The sed, the tumbrel, hurdles, and the stall,

These all must be prepar'd.

SLEDDED, adj. [from slod.] Mounted on a sled.

So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,

He smote the sladd Polack on the ice.

SLEDGE, n. f. [slæg, Saxon; slægga, Icelandic.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force,

At once upon him ran, and him beset,

With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,

And on his shield like iron slides bet.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,

The hardest iron soon doth mollify,

That with his heavy slid he can it beat,

And fashion to what he it list apply.

The uphand slid is used by under workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out: they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head.

Aristotle ascribes it unto the swiftness of that motion; but he would follow that the quick froak of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy, than any softer and more gentle striking of a great slid.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a slid. See SLED.

In Lancashire, they use a sort of slid made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horse.

SLEEK, n. f. [slēk, Dutch.] Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,

Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights.

Envy! and such like

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,

As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton

Y' appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin.

Yet are the men more loose than they,

More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rub'd, and trim'd,

More sleek'd, more soft, and flacker limb'd.

And they waken with that light,

Whose day shall never sleep in night.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly bond clown in chains of beef, ere thou sleep in thy flesh,

I beseech jove on my knees thou mayst be turned into hob-nails.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!

Creep in our ears.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,

For'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,

Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots amain,

Till counterbuff'd the stops, and sleeps again.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want to be roused into a quick thankful sense of it.

4. To be dead; death being a state from which man will some time awake.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave; though he only sleeps unto God, who can raise from the chamber of death.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heav'n will one day open

The king's eyes, that so long have sleep upon

This bold, bad man.

6. To be unnotic'd, or unattended.

You ever

Have with'd the sleeping of this business, never Desir'd it to be stir'd.

SLEEP, n. f. [from the verb.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry sleep no more!

Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent sleep;

Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care;

The birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath,

Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,

Chief nourisher in life's feast.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour; and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep; and darkness furthereth sleep.

4. A fish.

SLEEPILY, adv. [from sleepy.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

I rather chuse to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings.

2. Dully; lazily.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned

SLEEPINESS, n. f. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most ill boding symptom of a fever.

SLEEPLESS, adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep.

Though after sleepless night.

While penive poets painful vigils keep,

Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep.

SLEEPY, adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; disposed to sleep.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?

They must lie there. Go, carry them and smear

The sleepy grooms with blood.

And rising hasty, took a short adieu.

3. Somniferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses unintelligent of our insufficiency, may though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench

Of that forgetful lake benumb not still.

SLEEPY, n. f. [perhaps from the Danish, slæt.] A kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,

The midmost battles halting up behind,

Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleep,

And hear their thunder rattling in the wind.

Obscure the flies, and hang on beads below.

Huge ovens stand inclos'd in wintry walls

Of snow congel'd.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleep, then snow, and ice, and frost.

TO SLEEPY, v. n. [from the noun.] To show in small parties, intermixed with rain.

SLEEPY, adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleep.

SLEEVE, n. f. [slēp, Saxon.]

1. The part of a garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes spy'd my treasure,

With sleeves turn'd up loose hair, and breast enlarged,

Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in armory, the fashion of the Manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their miltres or love's sleeve

upon their arms; for Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Astoloth in a tourney.

Your hose should be ungarter'd, your sleeve unbutton'd, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless delation.

You would think a smock a line-angel, he so chants to the sleeve-band, and the work about the square on't.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cape.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,

Their hoods and sleeves the same.

2. Slee

3. Not bulky; slight; not strong.
Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains. Pope.
4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.
Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentence upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have special regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities. Hooker.
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident. Shakespeare.
Positively to define that feaon, there is no slender difficulty. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It is a very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evils;
when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. Tilston.
5. Sparing; less than enough: as, a slender estate and slender parts.
At my lodging,
The worst is this, that at slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pitance. Shaksp.
In obstructions inflammatory, the aliment ought to be cool,
slender, thin, diluting. Arbutnot.
6. Not amply supplied.
The good Othorus often deign'd
To grace my slender table with his presence. Philips.
SLENDERLY, adv. [from slender.]
1. Without bulk.
2. Slightly; meanly.
If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded. Hayward.
If I have done well, it is that which I desired; but if sen-
derly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to. 2 Mac.
SLENDERNESS, n. f. [from slender.]
1. Thinness; smallness of circumference.
Small whistles give a sound because of their extreme slender- ness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Dryden.
Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of the feathers; that is from the slenderness of the very fine hairs or capillamenta, which grow out of the sides of the groffer lateral branches or fibres of those feathers. Newton.
2. Want of bulk or strength.
It is preceded by a spitting of blood, occasioned by its acrimony, and too great a projectile motion, with slenderness and weakness of the vessels. Arbutnot on Diet.
3. Slightness; weakness; inconsiderableness.
The slenderness of your reasons against the book, together with the inconveniences that must of necessity follow, have procured a great credit unto it. Whitgift.
4. Want of plenty.
SLEPT, The preterite of sleep.
Silence! coeval with eternity,
Thou wert ere nature first began to be,
'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slapt fast in thee. Pope.
SLEW: The preterite of slay.
He slew Hamet, a great commander among the Numidians, and chased Benchedes and Amida, two of their greatest princes, out of the country. Knolles's History of the Turks.
TO SLEW, v. n. [See TO SLEAVE.] To part or twist into threads.
Why art thou then exasperate, thou immaterial skein of slay'd silk? Shakespeare.
TO SLICE, v. n. [Irish, Saxon.]
1. To cut into flat pieces.
Their cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandy's Journey.
The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pikes and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.
2. To cut into parts.
Nature left one by thee, and therefore must slice one in two to keep her number just. Cleveland.
3. To cut off.
When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,
I slic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf. Gay.
4. To cut; to divide.
Ambitious princes and tyrants slice the earth among them.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
SLICE, n. f. [Ipsice, Saxon; from the verb.]
1. A broad piece cut off.
Hacking of trees in their bark, both downright and across, so as you may make them rather in slices than in continued hacks, doth great good to trees. Bacon.
You need not wipe your knife to cut bread; because in cutting a slice or two it will wipe itself. Swift.
He from out the chimney took,
A slice of bacon off the hook,
And freely, from the fattest side,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.

2. A broad piece.
Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That lac'd with bits of ruffick, makes a front. Pope.
3. A broad head fixed in a handle; a peel; a spatula.
The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, much like the slice of apothecaries, with which they spread plaisters. Hokewill.
When burning with the iron in it, with the slice, clap the coals upon the outside close together, to keep the heat in. Max.
SLICK, adj. [Ipsice, Dutch. See SLEEK.]
Glass attracts but weakly; some slick stones, and thick gla-ses indifferently. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SLID, The preterite of slide.
At first the silent venom slid with ease,
And seiz'd her cooler senses by degrees. Dryden's Æneid.
SLID'DEN, v. n. [from slide.]
Why is this people slidden back, by a perpetual backsliding?
TO SLID'DER, v. n. [Ipsice, Dutch.] To slide with inter- ruption.
Go thou from me to fate,
Now die: with that he drag'd the trembling fire,
Slid'd ring through clotted blood. Dryden.
TO SLIDE, v. n. [from slide, preterite; slidden, participle pass. [Ipsice, Ipsice, Saxon; sliden, Dutch; gl-slides, Welsh.]
1. To pass along smoothly; to slip; to glide.
Sounds do not only slide upon the surface of a smooth body, but communicate with the spirits in the pores of the body.
Bacon's Natural History.
Ulysses, Sthenelus, Tifander slide
Down by a rope, Machaon was their guide. Dryden.
2. To move without change of the foot.
Oh Ladon, happy Ladon, rather slide than run by her,
left thou shouldst make her legs slip from her. Sidney.
Smooth sliding without step.
He that once fins, like him that slides on ice,
Goes swiftly down the slippery ways of vice:
Though conscience checks him, yet those rubs gone o'er,
He slides on smoothly, and looks back no more. Dryden.
3. To pass inadvertently.
Make a door and a bar for thy mouth: beware thou slide not by it. Ecclesi xlviii. 26.
4. To pass unnoticed.
In the princes I could find no apprehension of what I said or did, but with a calm carelessness, letting every thing slide justly, as we do by their speeches, who neither in matter nor person do any way belong unto us. Sidney.
5. To pass along by silent and unobviated progression.
Thou shalt
Hate all, shew charity to none;
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar. Shakespeare.
Then no day void of bliss, of pleasure leaving,
Ages shall slide away without perceiving. Dryden.
Rescue me from their ignoble hands:
Let me kiss yours when you my wound begin,
Then easy death will slide with pleasure in. Dryden.
Their eye slides over the pages, or the words slide over their eyes, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tale. Watts.
6. To pass silently and gradually from good to bad.
Nor could they have slid into those brutish immoralities of life, had they duly manured those first practical notions and dictates of right reason. South.
7. To pass without difficulty or obstruction.
Such of them should be retained as slide easily of themselves into English compounds, without violence to the ear. Pope.
Begin with sense, of every art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow. Pope.
A work to wonder at.
8. To move upon the ice by a single impulse, without change of feet.
The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide. Waller.
9. To fall by error.
The discovering and reprehension of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things, which so cleareth man's judgment, as it is the less apt to slide into any error. Bacon.
10. To be not firm.
Ye fair!
Be greatly cautious of your sliding hearts. Thomson.
11. To pass with a free and gentle course or flow.
TO SLIDE, v. a. To put imperceptibly.
Little tricks of sophistry by sliding in, or leaving out such words as entirely change the question, should be abandoned by all fair disputants. Watts.
SLIDE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Smooth and easy passage.
We have some slides or reliques of the voice or strings, continued without notes, from one to another, rising or falling, which are delightful. Bacon's Natural History.

- Kings that have able men of their nobility shall find ease in employing them, and a better slide into their business, for people naturally bend to them. Bacon.
2. Flow; even course.
There be, whose fortunes are like Homer's verses, that have a slide and eases more than the verses of other poets. Bac.
SLIDDER, n. f. [from slide.] He who slides.
SLIGHT, adv. [Ipsice, Dutch.]
1. Small; worthless; inconsiderable.
Is Cesar with Antonius priz'd to slight? Shakespeare.
Their arms, their arts, their manners I disclose,
Slight is the subject, but the praise not small. Dryden.
If heav'n assist, and Phebus hear my call,
Slight is the subject, but not so the praise;
If the inspires, and he approve my lays. Pope.
2. Not important; not cogent; weak.
Some firmly embrace doctrines upon slight grounds, some upon no grounds, and some contrary to appearance. Locke.
3. Negligent; not vehement; not done with effect.
The shaking of the head is a gesture of slight refusal. Bacon.
He in contempt
At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound. Milton.
4. Foolish; weak of mind.
No beast ever was to slight
For man, as for his God, to fight. Hadibras.
5. Not strong; thin; as a slight silk.
SLIGHT, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Neglect; contempt; act of scorn.
People in misfortune contrive unavoidable accidents into slights or neglects. Clarissa.
2. Artifice; cunning practice. See SLEIGHT.
As bolterous a thing as force is, it rarely achieves any thing but under the conduct of fraud. Slight of hand has done that, which force of hand could never do. South.
After Nic had bamboozled John a while, what with slight of hand, and taking from his own score, and adding to John's, Nic brought the balance to his own side. Arbutnot.
TO SLIGHT, v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To neglect; to disregard.
Beware lest they transgress and slight that sole command.
Milton.
You cannot expect your son should have any regard for one whom he sees you slight. Locke.
2. To throw carelessly, unless in this passage to slight be the same with sling.
The rogues slighted me into the river, with as little remorse as they would have drowned puppies. Shakespeare.
3. [Ipsice, Dutch.] To overthrow; to demolish. Junius,
Shimmer, and Answer.
4. TO SLIGHT OVER. To treat or perform carelessly.
These men, when they have promised great matters, and filled most shamefully, if they have the perfection of boldness, will but slight it over, and no more ado. Bacon's Essays.
His death and your deliverance
Were themes that ought not to be slighted over. Dryden.
SLIGHTLY, n. f. [from slight.] One who disregards.
SLIGHTLY, adv. [from slighting.] Without reverence;
with contempt.
If my sceptick speaks slightingly of the opinions he opposes,
I have done no more than became the part. Beyle.
SLIGHTLY, adv. [from slight.]
1. Negligently; without regard.
Words, both because they are common, and do not so strongly move the fancy of man, are for the most part but slightly heard. Hooker.
Leave nothing fitting for the purpose
Untouch'd, or slightly handled in discourse. Shakespeare.
You were to blame
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakespeare.
The letter-writer diffembles his knowledge of this restriction, and contents himself slightly to mention it towards the close of his pamphlet. Auterbury.
2. Scornfully; contemptuously.
Long had the Gallick monarch uncontroul'd;
Enlarg'd his borders, and of human force
Opponent slightly thought. Philips.
3. Weakly; without force.
Scorn not the facil gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.
4. Without worth.
SLIGHTNESS, n. f. [from slight.]
1. Weakness; want of strength.
2. Negligence; want of attention; want of vehemence.
Where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance, it must omit Real necessities, and give way the while
To' unfeeling slighting. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
What strong cries must they be that shall drown so loud a clamour of impieties? and how does it reproach the slightingness of our deep heartless address? Decay of Piety.
SL'LY, adv. [from slight.] Cunningly; with cunning secrecy;
with subtle covertness.

SLI

- Were there a serpent seen with forked tongue,
That slily glided towards your majesty,
It were but necessary you were wak'd. Shakespeare.
He, closely false and slily wife,
Cast how he might annoy them most from far. Fairfax.
Satan, like a cunning pick-lock, slily robs us of our grand treasure. Decay of Piety.
With this he did a herd of goats controul;
Which by the way he met, and slily stole:
Clad like a country swain. Dryden.
May hypocrites,
That slily speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, pleas'd with the relish weak,
Drink on unwarn'd, till by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose,
And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Philips.
SLIM, adv. [A cant word as it seems, and therefore not to be used.] Slender; thin of shape.
A thin slim-gutt'd fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a henroost; and when he had stuf't his guts well, squeezed hard to get out again; but the hole was too little. L'Estr.
I was jogg'd on the elbow by a slim young girl of seventeen. Addison.
SLIME, n. f. [Ipsice, Saxon; sligm, Dutch.] Viscous mire; any glutinous substance.
The higher Nilus swells
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain. Shakespeare.
Brick for stone, and slime for mortar. Gen.
The vale of Siddim was full of slime-pits. Gen. xiv. 10.
God, out of his goodness, caused the wind to blow, to dry up the abundant slime and mud of the earth, and make the land more firm, and to cleanse the air of thick vapours and unwholesome mists. Raleigh.
Some plants grow upon the top of the sea, from some con-cretion of slime where the sun beateh hot, and the sea fir-reth little. Bacon's Natural History.
And with Asphaltick slime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell, the gather'd beach
They fasten'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Now dragon grown; larger than whom the fun
Engender'd in the Pythian vale on slime, Huge Python! Milton's Paradise Lost.
O foul descent! I'm now constrain'd
Into a beast, to mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute.
SLIMNESS, n. f. [from slimy.] Viscosity; glutinous mat- ter.
By a weak fermentation a pendulous sliminess is produced, which answers a pituitous state. Floyer.
SLIMY, adj. [from slimy.]
1. Overspread with slime.
My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony. Shakespeare.
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems,
That mock'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by. Shak.
They have cobwebs about them, which is a sign of a slimy dryness. Bacon.
The rest are all by bad example led,
And in their father's slimy track they tread.
Eels for want of exercise, are fat and slimy. Dryden.
Shoals of slow house-bearing do snails creep
O'er the ripe fruitage, paring slimy tracks
In the sleek rind. Philips.
The swallow sweeps
The slimy pool to build his hanging house. Thomson.
2. Viscous; glutinous.
Then both from out hell-gates, into the waste,
Wide anarchy of chaos, damp and dark,
Hovering upon the waters, what they met
Solid or slimy, as in raging sea,
Toft up and down, together crowded drove. Milton.
From their groins they shed
A slimy juice by false conception bred. Dryden.
The astrological undertakers would raise men like vegetables, out of some fat and slimy soil, well digested by the kindly heat of the sun, and impregnated with the influence of the stars. Bentley.
SL'NESS, n. f. [from slight.] Designing artifice.
By an excellent facility in mimicry, my correspondent can assume my air, and give my taciturnity a sliness, which diverts more than any thing I could say. Addison.
SLING, n. f. [Ipsice, Saxon; slingen, Dutch.]
1. A missile weapon made by a strap and two strings; the stone is lodged in the strap, and thrown by loosing one of the strings.
The arrow cannot make him see: sling stones are turned with him into rubble. Job xli. 28.
24 H Dreads

SLI

Dreads he the twanging of the archer's string?
Or linging stones from the Phœnician sling? Sandys.
Slings have so much greater swiftness than a stone thrown from the hand, by how much the end of the sling is farther off from the shoulder-joint, the center of motion. Wilkins.

The Iufcan king
Laid by the lance, and took him to the sling;
Thrice whir'd the thong around his head, and threw
The heated lead, half melted as it flew. Dryden's En.
Whirl'd from a sling, or from an engine thrown,
Amidst the foes, as flies a mighty stone,
So flew the heat. Dryden's Ovid.

2. A throw; a stroke.
"Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burft
With fuck'd and glutted offal, at one sling
Of thy victorious arm, well-pleasing ion. Milt. Par. Logt.

3. A kind of hanging bandage.
To SLING, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw by a sling.
2. To throw; to cast. Not very proper.
Ætina's entrails fraught with fire,
That now casts out dark fumes and pitchy clouds,
Incent, or tears up mountains by the roots,
Or flings a broken rock aloft in air. Addison.

3. To hang loosely by a string.
From rivers drive the kids, and sling your hook;
Anon I'll wash 'em in the shallow brook. Dryden.

4. To move by means of a rope.
Cœnus I saw amidst the shouts
Of mariners, and busy care to sling
His horses soon aloft. Dryden's Cleomenes.

They flung up one of their largest hogheads, then rolled it towards my hand, and beat out the top. Gulliver's Travels.

SLINGER, n. f. [from sling.] One who slings or uses the sling.
The slingers went about it, and smote it. 2 Kings iii. 25.

To SLINK, v. n. preter. slunk. [Jingian, Saxon, to creep.] To sneak; to steal out of the way.

We will slink away in fupper-time, disguise us at my lodging, and return all in an hour. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave,
So his familiars from his buried fortunes Slink away. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

He, after Eve feduc'd, unminded slunk
Into the wood fast by. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not far from hence doth dwell
A cunning man, hight Sidrophel,
To whom all people far and near
On deep importances repair;
When bras and pewter hap to fray,
And linen slinks out of the way. Hudibras.

She slunk into a corner, where she lay trembling 'till the company went their way. L'Estrange.

He would pinch the children in the dark, and then slink into a corner, as if no body had done it. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-loft through a chink;
But having amply stuff'd his skin,
Could not get out as he got in. Pope's Epist. of Horace.

We have a fuspicious, fearful, and conftained countenance, often turning back, and flinking through narrow lanes. Swift.

To SLINK, v. a. To cast; to miscarry of. A low word.
To keep her where she may have good spring-water to drink. Mort.

To SLIP, v. n. [Jingian, Saxon; slippen, Dutch.]
1. To slide; not to tread firm.

If a man walks over a narrow bridge, when he is drunk, it is no wonder that he forgets his caution while he overlooks his danger; but he who is sober, and views that nice separation between himself and the devouring deep, so that, if he should slip, he fees his grave gaping under him, surely must needs take every step with horror and the utmost caution. South.

A skilful dancer on the ropes slips willingly, and makes a seeming tumble, that you may think him in great hazard, while he is only giving you a proof of his dexterity. Dryden.

If after some distinguish'd leap
He drops his pole, and seems to slip,
Straight gath'ring all his active strength,
He rises higher half his length. Prior.

2. To slide; to glide.
Oh Ladon, happy Ladon! rather slide than run by her, lest thou shouldst make her legs slip from her. Sidney.

They trim their feathers, which makes them oily and slippery, that the water may slip off them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To move or fly out of place.
Sometimes the ankle-bone is apt to turn out on either side, by reason of relaxation, which though you reduce, yet, upon the least walking on it, the bone slips out again. Wifeman.

4. To sneak; to slink.
From her most beastly company
I gain refrain, in mind to slip away,
Soon as appear'd safe opportunity. Spenser.

When Judas saw that his host slip away, he was sore troubled. Mac. ix. 7.

I'll slip down out of my lodging. Dryden's Den Sedgitan.
Thus one tradesman slips away,
To give his partner fairer play. Prior.

5. To glide; to pass unexpectedly or imperceptibly.
The banks of either side seeming arms of the loving earth, that fain would embrace it, and the river a wanton nymph, which still would slip from it. Sidney.

The blessing of the Lord shall slip from thee, without doing thee any good, if thou hast not ceased from doing evil. Taylor.

Slipping from thy mother's eye thou went'st
Alone into the temple; there was found
Among the gravest rabbies disputant,
On points and questions fitting Moses' chair. Milton.

Thrice around his neck his arms he threw,
And thrice the sitting shadow slipp'd away,
Like winds or empty dreams that fly the day. Dryden.

Though with pale cheeks, wet beard, and dropping hair,
None but my Ceyx could appear so fair,
I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace;
But through my arms he slips, and vanish'd from the place. Dryden.

When a corn slips out of their paws, they take hold of it again. Addison's Spectator.

Wife men watch every opportunity, and retrieve every mispent hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.

I will impute no defect to those two years which have slipped by since. Swift to Pope.

6. To fall into fault or error.
If he had been as you,
And you as he, you would have slip'd like him;
But he, like you, would not have been so stern. Shakspere.

One slippeth in his speech, but not from his heart. Ecclus.
An eloquent man is known far and near; but a man of understanding knoweth when he slippeth. Ecclus. xxi. 7.

7. To creep by oversight.
Some mistakes may have slip'd into it; but others will be prevented by the name being now set at length. ado. to Dunsin.

8. To escape; to fall away out of the memory.
By the hearer it is still presumed, that if they be let slip for the present, what good forever they contain is lost, and that without all hope of recovery. Flower.

The mathematician proceeds upon propositions he has once demonstrated; and though the demonstration may have slip'd out of his memory, he builds upon the truth. Addison.

Use the most proper methods to retain the ideas you have acquired; for the mind is ready to let many of them slip, unless some pains be taken to fix them upon the memory. Watts.

To SLIP, v. a.
1. To convey secretly.
In his officious attendance upon his mistress, he tried to slip a powder into her drink. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

2. To lose by negligence.
You are not now to think what's best to do,
As in beginnings; but what must be done,
Being thus enter'd; and slip no advantage
That may secure you. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

Let us not slip th' occasion, whether scorn
Or satiate fury yield it from our foe. Milton.

One ill man may not think of the mischief he could do, or slip the occasion. L'Estrange.

To slip the market, when thus fairly offered, is great im-prudence. Cullier.

For watching occasions to correct others in their discourses, and not to slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed. Lacke.

Thus far my author has slip'd his first design; not a letter of what has been yet said promoting any ways the trial. Atter.

3. To part twigs from the main body by laceration.
The runners spread from the master-roots, and have little sprouts or roots to them, which, being cut four or five inches long, make excellent sets: the branches also may be slipped and planted. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. To escape from; to leave silly.
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit it not.
— Oh, fir, Lucenio slipp'd me like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master. Shaksp.

5. To let loose.
On Eryx altars lays
A lamb new fallen to the stormy seas;
Then slips his haulers, and his anchors weighs. Dryden.

6. To let a dog loose.
The impatient greyhound, slips from far,
Bounds o'er the globe, to court the fearful hare. Dryden.

7. To throw off any thing that holds one.
Forced to alight, my horse slipped his bridle, and ran away. Swift.

8. To pass over negligently.
If our author gives us a list of his doctrines, with what reason can that about indulgences be slipped over? Atterbury.

SLIP, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of slipping; false step.

2. Errour; mistake; fault.

There put on him

What forgeries you please: marry, none so rank
As may dishonour him.

But, fir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,
As are most known to youth and liberty. Shakspere.

Of the promise there made, our master hath failed us, by slip of memory, or injury of time. Weston's Architecture.

This religious affection, which nature has implanted in man, would be the most enormous slip he could commit.

One casual slip is enough to weigh down the faithful service of a long life. L'Estrange.

Alonzo, mark the characters;
And if th' impolitor's pen have made a slip,
That shews it counterfeit, mark that and save me. Dryden.

Lighting upon a very easy slip I have made, in putting one seemingly indifferent word for another, that discovery opened me this present view. Lacke.

Any little slip is more conspicuous and observable in a good man's conduct than in another's, as it is not of a piece with his character. Addison's Spectator.

4. A twig torn from the main stock.
In truth, they are fewer, when they come to be discussed by reason, than otherwise they seem, when by heat of contention they are divided into many slips, and of every branch an heap is made. Hucker.

The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain. Abb.
Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds. Shakspere.

Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble rock
Was graft with crab-tree slips, whose fruit thou art. Shaksp.

Trees are apparelled with flowers or herbs, by boring holes in their bodies, and putting into them earth holpen with muck, and setting seeds or slips of violets in the earth. Bacon.

So have I seen some tender slips,
Sav'd with care from Winter's nip,
The pride of her carnation train,
Pluck'd up by some unheedy swain. Milton.

The lab'rer cuts
Young slips, and in the soil securely puts. Dryden.

They are propagated not only by the seed, but many also by the root, and some by slips or cuttings. Ray on the Creation.

4. A leath or string in which a dog is held.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips, Straining upon the start. Shaksp. Henry V.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively, nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slips, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramb.

5. An escape; a desertion. I know not whether to give the slip, be not originally taken from a dog that runs and leaves the firing or slip in the leader's hand.

The more shame for her goodly slips,
To give to near a friend the slip. Hudibras.

The daw did not like his companion, and gave him the slip,
and away into the woods. L'Estrange.

Their explications are not your's, and will give you the slip. Lacke.

6. A long narrow piece.
Between these eastern and western mountains lies a slip of lower ground, which runs across the island. Addison.

SLIPBOARD, n. f. [slip and board.] A board sliding in grooves.
I ventured to draw back the slipboard on the roof, contrived on purpose to let in air. Gulliver's Travels.

SLIPKNOT, n. f. [slip and knot.] A bowknot; a knot easily untied.

They draw off so much line as is necessary, and fasten the rest upon the line-rowl with a slipknot, that no more line turn off. Moran's Mech. Exer.

In large wounds a single knot first; over this a little linen compress, on which is to be made another single knot, and then a slipknot, which may be loosened upon inflammation. Sharp's Surgery.

SLIPPER, or Slipshoe, n. f. [from slip.] A shoe without leather behind, into which the foot slips easily.

A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;
A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps, and amber studs. Raleigh.

If he went abroad too much, she'd use
To give him slippers, and lock up his shoes. King.

Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knock'd the ground,
And the prest'd watch return'd a silver found. Pope.

SLIPPER, adj. [Jingian, Saxon.] Slippery; not firm. Obsolete. Perhaps never in use but for poetical convenience.

A trifling state of earthly things, and slipper hope
Of mortal men, that twinkle and tweek for nought. Spenser.

SLIPPERINESS, n. f. [from slippery.]

1. State or quality of being slippery; smoothness; glibness.
We do not only fall by the slipperiness of our tongues, but we deliberately discipline them to mischief. Grov. of the Tongue.

The schirrus may be distinguished by its want of inflammation in the skin, its smoothness, and slipperiness deep in the breast. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Uncertainty; want of firm footing.
SLIPPERY, adj. [Jingian, Saxon; slipperig, Swedish.]

1. Smooth; glib.
They trim their feathers, which makes them oily and slippery, that the water slips off. Mortimer.

Oily substances only lubricate and make the bowels slippery. Arbutnot.

2. Not affording firm footing.
Did you know the art o' th' court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb,
Is certain falling; or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

His promise to trust to as slippery as ice. Tusser.
Their way shall be as slippery ways in the darkness. Jer. xxiii.

The slippery tops of human state,
The gilded pinacles of fate. Cowley.

The higher they are raised, the giddier they are; the more slippery is their standing, and the deeper the fall. L'Estrange.

The highest hill is the most slippery place,
And fortune mocks us with a smiling face. Denham.

Beauty, like ice, our footing does betray;
Who can tread sure on the smooth slippery way? Dryden.

3. Hard to hold; hard to keep.
Thus surely bound, yet be not overhold,
The slippery god will try to loose his hold;
And various forms assume, to cheat thy sight,
And with vain images of beals affright. Dryden's Georg.

4. Not standing firm.
When they fall, as being slippery flanders,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Doth one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fast. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

5. Uncertain; changeable; mutable; instable.
Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise,
Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissolution of a doir, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspere.

He looking down
With scorn or pity on the slippery state
Of kings, will tread upon the neck of fate. Denb. Sophy.

6. Not certain in its effect.
One sure trick is better than a hundred slippery ones. L'Estr.

7. [Lubrique, French.] Not chaste.
My wife is slippery. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

SLIPPERY, adv. [from slip.] Slippery; easily sliding. A barbarous provincial word.

The white of an egg is rosy, slippery, and nutritious. Floyer.

SLIPSHOD, adj. [slip and shod.] Having the shoes not pulled up at the heels, but barely slipped on.

The slipshod prentice from his master's door
Had par'd the dirt, and sprinkled round the floor. Swift.

SLIPSHOD, n. f. Bad liquor. A low word formed by redupli-cation of slip.

SLISH, n. f. A low word formed by reduplicating slash.
What! this a sleeve?

Here's snip and nip, and slish and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakspere.

To SLIT, v. a. pret. and part. slit and slitted. [Jingian, Saxon.]
To cut longwise.

To make plants medicinable slit the root, and infuse into it the medicine; as hellebore, opium, scammony, and then bind it up. Bacon's Nat. History.

The deers of Arginusa had their ears divided, occasioned at first by slitting the ears. Brown's Vugar Errours.

Had it hit
The upper part of him, the blow
Had slit, as sure as that below. Hudibras.

We slit the preternatural body open. Wifeman's Surgery.
A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks. Temple.

If a tinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.

He took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

SLIT, n. f. [Jingian, Saxon.] A long cut, or narrow opening.
In St James's fields is a conduit of bricks, unto which joineth a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone; and in the brick conduit there is a wind-w, and in the round

round house a slit or rift of some little breadth: if you cry out in the rift, it will make a fearful roaring at the window. Bacon.
Where the tender rinds of trees disclose
Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows:
Just in that place a narrow slit we make.
Then other buds from bearing trees we take;
Infered thus, the wounded rind we clofe. Dryden.
I found, by looking through a slit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eyes, and held close to it parallel to the prisms, I could see the circles much distinct, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise. Newton.
To SLIVE. v. a. [slip, Saxon.] To split; to divide.
To SLIVER. v. a. longwise; to tear off longwise.
Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of goat, and slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moons eclipse. Shakep. Macbeth.
SLIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] A branch torn off. Sliver, in Scotland, still denotes a slice cut off: as, he took a large sliver of the beef.
There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clambring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy coronet and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shak. Hamlet.
SLAVERS. n. f. Of a cart, are those underpieces which keep the bottom together. Bailey.
SLAVER. n. f. [glavariz, Welsh.] Slaver. See SLAVER.
To SLOCK. v. n. [slock, to quench, Swedish and Scottish.] To lake; to quench.
SLOE. n. f. [pla, Saxon; slane, Danish.] The fruit of the blackthorn, a small wild plum.
The fair pomegranate might adorn the pine,
The grape the bramble, and the slae the vine. Blackmore.
When you fell your underwoods, low haws and slaws in them, and they will furnish you, without doing of your woods any hurt. Mortimer's Husbandry.
SLOOP. n. f. A small ship.
To SLOP. v. a. [from lep, lep, slop.] To drink groggy and greedily.
SLOP. n. f. [from the verb.] Mean and vile liquor of any kind. Generally some nauseous or useless medicinal liquor.
The sick husband here wanted for neither slops nor doctors.
But thou, whatever slops she will have bought,
Be thankful. Dryden's Jovencal.
SLOP. n. f. [slop, Saxon; slove, Dutch, a covering.] Trowlers; open breeches.
What said Mr. Dombledon about the fatten for my short cloak and slops? Shakep. Henry IV.
SLOPE. adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original. Jenius omits it: Skinner derives it from slop, lax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in slophen, Dutch, to run, slope being easy to the runner.] Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of acclivity or declivity; forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.
Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a slower rise and fall. Bacon.
Murm'ring waters fall
Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams. Milton.
SLOPE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. An oblique direction; any thing obliquely directed.
2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.
Growing upon slopes is caused for that moss, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, not be in a pool. Bacon.
My lord advances with majestick mien,
And when up ten steep slopes you've dragg'd your thighs,
Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes. Pope.
SLOPE. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.
Urie
Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now rais'd
Bore him slope downward to the fun, now fall'n. Milton.
To SLOPE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To form to obliquity or declivity; to direct obliquely.
Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations. Shakep. Macbeth.
On each hand the flames
Driv'n backward slope their pointing spires, and row'd
In billows, leave t' th' midst a horrid vale. Milt. Par. Left.
The star, that rose at evening bright,
Toward heav'n's descent had slop'd his wattering wheel. Milt.
All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phœbus shin'd in vain:
Nor till oblique he slop'd his evening ray,
Had Somnus dry'd the balmy dews away. Pope's Odyssey.
To SLOPE. v. n. To take an oblique or declivous direction.
Betwixt the midst and these the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats for human kind;
And cross their limits cut a slipping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway. Dryden.

SLO

Upstarts a palace, lo! th' obedient base
Slips at its foot, the woods its sides embrace. Pope.
There is a fruit hole in every ants nest half an inch deep, and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine. Addison's Spectator.
SLOPINESS. n. f. [from slope.] Obliquity; declivity; not perpendicularly.
The Italians give the cover a graceful pendency of slopes, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest ridge. Waton's Architect.
SLOPEWISE. adj. [slope and wise.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.
The Wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the Ose from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bent or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the Ose. Carcu.
SLOPINGLY. adv. [from sloping.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.
These atoms do not defend always perpendicularly, but sometimes slopingly. Dryden on the Soul.
SLOPPY. adj. [from slop.] Miry and wet; perhaps rather flabby. See SLAB.
To SLOTT. v. a. [slughe, Dutch.] To strike or clath hard.
SLOT. n. f. [sloed, Islandick.] The track of a deer.
SLOTH. n. f. [sloth, Saxon.] It might therefore be not improperly written sleath, but that it seems better to regard the orthography of the primitive sloaw.
1. Slothness; tardiness.
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth and tricks of Rome. Shak. Henry VIII.
2. Laziness; sluggishness; idleness.
False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand,
Hog in sloth, fox in stealth. Shakep. King Lear.
They change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth. Milt.
Industry approach'd,
And rous'd him from his miserable sloth. Thomson's Autumn.
3. An animal.
The sloth is an animal of so slow a motion, that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree; and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day. Grew.
SLOTHFUL. adj. [sloth and full.] Idle; lazy; sluggish; inactive; indolent; dull of motion.
He that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster. Prov. xviii. 9.
The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour. Prov. xxi. 25.
To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton.
Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease and loose delights,
Who never acts of honour dust purities,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue. Dryden.
The very soul of the slothful does effectually but lie-drowning in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses. L'Estrange.
SLOTHFULLY. adv. [from slothful.] With sloth.
SLOTHFULNESS. n. f. [from slothful.] Idleness; laziness; sluggishness; inactivity.
To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneness; it maketh light of the providence of God: and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wanteth light of a mature judgment to direct it, when we join with our prayer slothfulness and neglect of convenient labour. Hosier.
Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger. Prov. xix. 15.
SLOUCH. n. f. [sloof, Danish, stupid.]
1. A downcast look; a depression of the head. In Scotland, an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is.
Our doctor has every quality that can make a man useful; but, alas! he hath a sort of slouch in his walk. Swift.
2. A man who looks heavy and clownish.
Begin thy carols then, thou wanton slouch;
Pe thine oaken staff, or mine the pouch. Gos.
To SLOUCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a downcast clownish look.
SLOVEN. n. f. [sloef, Dutch; sloven, Welsh, nasty, flabby.] A man indelicately negligent of cleanliness; a man dirty dressed.
The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hosier.
Affect in things about these cleanlinesses,
That all may gladly board thee as a flow'r:
Sloven take up their flock of noisomeness
Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour.
For as when slovens do amiss
At others doots. Hosier.

SLO

You laugh, half beau, half sloven if I stand;
My wig half powder, and all fruff my band. Pope.
SLOVENLINESS. n. f. [from slovenly.] Indecent negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.
Slovenliness is the worst sign of a hard student, and civility the best exercise of the romits; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy. Watson.
SLOVENLY. adj. [from sloven.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly.
Sloven at last found out a slovenly lazy fellow, lolling at his ease, as if he had nothing to do. L'Estrange.
SLOVENLY. adv. [from sloven.] In a coarse inelegant manner.
As I hang my cloaths on somewhat slovenly, I no sooner went in but he frowned upon me. Pope.
SLOVENRY. n. f. [from sloven.] Dirtiness; want of neatness.
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field:
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
And time hath worn us into slovenry. Shakep. H. V.
SLOUGH. n. f. [slog, Saxon.]
1. A deep miry place; a hole full of dirt.
The Scots were in a fallow field, whereinto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough; in passing whereof many of the English horse were plunged, and some mired.
The ways being foul, twenty to one,
He's here stuck in slough, and overthrown. Milton.
A carter had laid his waggon fast in a slough. L'Estrange.
2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.
Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to insure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Shak. Twelfth Night.
When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakespeare.
As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shak. Hen. VI.
Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the speck'd pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside;
And in his summer liv'ry rolls along,
Ere't and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.
The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticle, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall: the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Grew.
The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Grew's Cefnal.
3. The part that separates from a foul sore.
At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings, which was the foreskin. Wifeman on Ulcers.
SLOUGHY. adj. [from slough.] Miry; boggy; muddy.
That custom should not be allowed of cutting scraws in low grounds sloughy underneath, which turn into bog. Swift.
SLOW. adj. [slap, Saxon; slaw, Frisick.]
1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.
Me thou think't not slow,
Who since the morning hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and on mid-day arriv'd
In Eden, distance inexpressible. Milton.
Where the motion is so slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost. Locke.
2. Late; not happening in a short time.
These changes in the heav'n, though slow, produc'd
Like change on sea and land, fidecal blast. Milton.
3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.
I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue. Ex. iv. 10.
Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut. Milton.
The slow of speech make in dreams unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.
4. Dull; inactive; tardy; sluggish.
Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryden.
5. Not hasty; acting with deliberation; not vehement.
The Lord is merciful, and slow to anger. Common Prayer.
He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding. Prov.

The politick and wife
Are fly slow things with circumspective eyes. Pope.
Slow, in composition, is an adverb, slowly.
This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
Twixt heav'n and earth. Donne.
To the shame of slow-endeavouring art
Thy early numbers flow. Milton.

SLU

This day's death denounc'd, if ought I see,
Will prove no sudden, but a slow-pac'd evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton's Par. Left.
For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost. Pope.
Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile, Pope.
Slow-pacing thrice around th' insidious pile.
To SLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use.
Now do you know the reason of this haste?
—I would I knew not why it should be slow'd. Shakespeare.
SLOWLY. adv. [from slow.]
1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.
The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day. Pope.
2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.
The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon.
Our fathers bent their baneful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew;
But did not France or Holland's fate force,
Whole rising pow'r to swift dominion flew. Dryden.
We oft our slowly growing works impart,
While images reflect from art to art. Pope.
3. Not hastily; not rashly.
4. Not promptly; not readily.
5. Tardily; sluggishly.
The chapel of St. Laurence advances so very slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the family of Medicis may be extinct before their burial place is finished. Addison on Italy.
SLOWNESS. n. f. [from slow.]
1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swiftness.
Providence hath confined these human arts, that what any invention hath in the strength of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swiftness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts.
2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.
Tyrants use what art they can to increase the slowness of death. Hosier.
3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection.
Christ would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and slowness of their hearts, in that they believed him not. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Want of promptness; want of readiness.
5. Deliberation; cool delay.
6. Dilatoriness; procrastination.
SLOWWORM. n. f. [slaywurm, Saxon.] The blind worm; a small viper, venomous, but scarcely mortal.
Though we have found formed snakes in the belly of the cecilia, or slowworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To SLOWBER. v. a. [Probably from lubber.]
1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.
Nature shew'd the doth not like men, who slubber up matters of mean account. Sidney.
Ballanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd, do not so,
Slubber not business for my sake. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.
As they are slubbered over, the malignity that remains will show itself in some chronick disease, or in some species of the lues venerea. Wifeman's Surgery.
2. To stain; to daub. [This seems to be from slubber, slubbery, or slawur.]
You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes, with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition. Shak.
3. To cover coarsely or carelessly.
A man of secret ambitious ends, and proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity. Watson.
SLUBBERDEQUILLION. n. f. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paitry, dirty, sorry wretch.
Quoth she, although thou hast deserv'd,
Bate slubberdequillion, to be serv'd,
As thou did'st vow to deal with me,
If thou had'st got the victory. Hudibras.
SLUDGE. n. f. [I suppose from slog, slough, Saxon.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.
The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud. Mortimer.
SLUG. n. f. [slug, Danish, and slock, Dutch, signify a glutton, and thence one that has the sloth of a glutton.]
1. An idler; a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.
Fie, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not! Shakespeare.
2. An hindrance; an obstruction.
Ufury dalls and damps all improvements, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

Each in their crystal sluice, he ere they fell
Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended. Milton.
- Divine Alphaeus, who, by secret sluice, Stole under seas to meet his Arethule. Milton.
- If we receive them not, they were more than seven; if only the natural sluices, they were fewer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- As waters from her sluices, flow'd Unbounded sorrow from her eyes:
And sent her wailings to the skies. Prior.
- To SLUICE, v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.
- Like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out our innocent soul through streams of blood. Shakspeare.
- Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake. Milton.
- You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop Withal, when these few are so dear, till I honour
Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams;
Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
And let me hunt her through embattled foes.
In duty plains; there will I be the first. Dryd. Span. Fryer.
- SLUICE*, adj. [from sluice.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.
- And oft whole fleets descend of sluicy rain,
Suck'd up by the spongy clouds from off the main:
The lofty fikes at once come pouring down,
The promise'd crop and golden labours down. Dryden.
- To SLUMBER, v. n. [slumieren, Saxon; sluymeren, Dutch.]

 science in the doing, he studied other incentives. Watson.
 SLUMBER. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.
 And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond
 To trust the mock'ry of unquiet flumbers. Shakspe. R. III.
 From carelessness it shall fall into flumber, and from a flum-ber it shall tleep into a deep and long sleep; 'till at last, perhaps, it shall tleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one that nothing but hell and judgement shall awaken it. South.
 Labour and rest, that equal periods keep;
 Obedient flumbers that can wake and weep. Pope.
 2. Sleep; repose.
 Boy! Lucius! fast asleep! Is it no matter;
 Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of flumber. Shakspe. Jul. Caf.

 to see the cause of theifm thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument flurred by them, and so for their work done to their hands. Cudworth.
 Studious to please the genius of the times,
 With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;
 He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,
 And took but with intention to restore. Dryden.
 3. To cheat; to trick.
 What was the publick faith found out for,
 But to flur men of what they thought for? Hudibras.
 Come, fever's the main,
 Cries Ganymede: the usual trick;
 Seven flur's I'll cure a nick. Prior.
 SLUR. n. f. [ flur, the verb. ] Faint reproach; slight offence.
 He is an ape made a king for fliewing tricks; and the fox is then to put a flur upon him, in expoling him for sport to the scorn of the people. L'Estrange.
 No one can rely upon such an one, either with safety for his affairs, or without a flur to his reputation; since he that trusts a knave has no other recompence, but to be accounted a fool for his pains. South's Sermon.
 SLUT. n. f. [ flodde, Dutch. ]
 1. A dirty woman.
 Cricket, to Windor chimneys shalt thou leap:
 Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths untwep;
 There pinch the maid's as blue as bilberry;
 Our radiant queen hates fluts and fluttry. Shakspeare.
 The fallow skin is for the swarthy put,
 And love can make a flattern of a flut. Dryden.

Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unwept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry;
Our radiant queen hates flirts and flut'ry. Shaksf. Lear.
These make our girls and their flutry rue,
By pinching them both black and blue;
And put a penny in their shoe,
The house for cleanly sweeping. Dryden.
A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather fluttry than nature, and the fault of his malter that kept him no cleaner. L'Estrange.
SLUTTRIST, adv. [from flut.] Naſſy; not nice; not cleanly;
dirty; indelicately neglect of cleanliness.
All preparations both for food and lodging ſuch as would make one detest nigardineſs, it is to flutſty a vice. Sidney.
Albeit the mariners do covet ſcore of cabins, yet indeed they are but flutſty dens that breed ſickneſs in peace, ſerving to cover ſealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with their ſplinters. Ralegh's Eſſays.
Fortune's difpleaſure is but flutſhy, if it ſmell fo ſtrongly as

SMALLPOX. n. f. [small and pox.] An eruptive distemper of great malignity; variole.
He fell sick of the smallpox. Wifeman.

SMALLY. adv. [from small.] In a little quantity; with minuteness; in a little or low degree.

A child that is still, and somewhat hard of wit, is never chosen by the father to be made a scholar, or else when he cometh to the school, is smally regarded. Acham.

SMALNESS. n. f. [from small.]

1. Littleness; not greatness.
The parts in glass are evenly spread, but are not so close as in gold; as we see by the easy admission of light, and by the smalness of the weight. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Littleness; want of bulk; minuteness; exility.
Whatever is invisible, in respect of the fineness of the body, or the smalness of the parts, or subtilty of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon's Natural History.

The smalness of the rays of light may contribute very much to the power of the agent by which they are refracted. Newt.

3. Want of strength; weakness.

SMALT. n. f.

A beautiful blue substance, produced from two parts of zaffre being fused with three parts common salt, and one part potash. Hill on Fossils.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water; and moreover turnsoil with lac mingled with smalt of bile. Peacham.

SMARAGDINE. adj. [smaragdinus, Latin.] Made of emerald; resembling emerald.

SMART. n. f. [smerta, Saxon; smart, Dutch; smarta, Swedish.]

1. Quick, pungent, lively pain.
Then her mind, though too late, by the smart, was brought to think of the disease. Sidney.

2. Pain, corporal or intellectual.
Millars are madd'd by advice discreet,
And counsel mitigates the greatest smart. Fairy Queen.
It increased the smart of his present sufferings, to compare them with his former happiness. Atterbury.

To SMART. v. n. [smerten, Saxon; smerten, Dutch.]

1. To feel quick lively pain.

Human blood, when first let, is mild, and will not make the eye or a fresh wound smart. Arbutnot.

2. To feel pain of body or mind.
He that is lurchy for a stranger shall smart for it. Prev.
No creature smarts so little as a fool.

Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break,
Thou unconcern'd can't hear the mighty crack. Pope.

SMART. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Fungent; sharp; causing smart.
How smart a lash that speech doth give my conscience? Shakespeare.

To the fair he fain would quarter show,
His tender heart recoils at every blow;
If unawares he gives too smart a stroke,
He means but to correct, and not provoke. Granville.

2. Quick; vigorous; active.
That day was spent in smart skirmishes, in which many fell. Clarendon.

This found proceeded from the nimble and smart percussions of the ambient air, made by the swift and irregular motions of the particles of the liquors. Boyle.

3. Producing any effect with force and vigour.
After show'rs,
The stars shine smartly, and the moon adorns,
As with unborow'd beams, her sharpen'd horns. Dryden.

4. Acute; witty.
It was a smart reply that Augustus made to one that minified this comfort of the fatality of things: this was so far from giving any ease to his mind, that it was the very thing that troubled him. Tillotson.

5. Brisk; vivacious; lively.
You may see a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, during the whole course of his harangue. A deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver. Addison.

SMART. n. f. A fellow affecting briskness and vivacity. A cant word.

SMARTLY. adv. [from smart.] After a smart manner; sharply; briskly; vigorously; wittily.

The art, order, and gravity of those proceedings, where short, severe, constant rules were set, and smartly pursued, made them less taken notice of. Clarendon.

SMARTNESS. n. f. [from smart.]

1. The quality of being smart; quickness; vigour.
What interest such a smartness in striking the air hath in the production of sound, may in some measure appear by the motion of a bullet, and that of a twitch or other wand, which produce no sound, if they do but slowly pass through the air; whereas if the one do smartly strike the air, and the other be shot out of a gun, the celerity of their percussions on humour, smartness or politeness, to my set. Swift.

SMATCH. n. f. [corrupted from smack.]

1. Taste; tincture; twang.
Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in't. Shakespeare.

Some nations have a peculiar guttural or nasal smatch in their language. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. [Corules, Latin.] A bird.
These falts have somewhat of a nitrons taste, but mixt with a smatch of a vitriolick. Grew.

To SMATTER. v. n. [It is supposed to be corrupted from smack
or teffe.]

1. To have a slight taste; to have a slight, superficial, and imperfect knowledge.
Such a practice gives a slight smattering of several sciences, without any solid knowledge. Watson.

Since, by a little smattering in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion, may he find it again by harder study and a humbler mind. Bentley.

2. To talk superficially or ignorantly.
In proper terms, such as men smatter,
When they throw out and mis the matter, Hudibras.
Of state affairs you cannot smatter;
Are awkward when you try to flatter. Swift.

SMATTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Superficial or slight knowledge.

All other sciences were extinguished during this empire, excepting only a smatter of judicial astrology. Temple.

SMATTERER. n. f. [from smatter.] One who has a slight or superficial knowledge.

These few who preserve any rudiments of learning, are, except one or two smatterers, the clergy's friends. Swift.

To SMEAR. v. a. [smearan, Saxon; smearan, Dutch.]

1. To overspread with something viscous and adhesive; to be-smear.
If any such be here, that love this painting,
Wherein you see me smear'd,
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
Let him wave thus. Shakespeare's Othello.

Then from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk,
Smear'd round with pitch. Milton.

Smear'd as the was with black Gorgonian blood,
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood. Dryden.

2. To soil; to contaminate.
Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smear'd thus, and mix'd with infamy,
I might have said no part of it is mine. Shakespeare.

SMEAR. adj. [from smear.] Dawby; adhesive.
A smear foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame. Ross.

SMEE. n. f. A sea fowl.
To SMEE. v. a. [smee, Saxon.] To smoke;
to blacken with smoke.

SMEE. adj. [smee, Saxon.] Soapy; detergent. Ditt.

To SMELL. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very obscure.
Skinner, the most acute of all etymologists, derives it from smel, warm, Dutch; because smells are increased by heat.]

1. To perceive by the nose.
Their neighbours hear the same musick, or smell the same perfumes with themselves: for here is enough. Calder.

2. To find out by mental faculty.
The horse smelt him out, and presently a croquet came in his head how to countermine him. De'Frange.

To SMELL. v. n.

1. To strike the nostrils.
The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shak.

The daintiest smells of flowers are out of those plants whose leaves smell not. Bacon's Natural History.

2. To have any particular scent.
Honey in Spain smelleth apparently of the rosemary or orange,
from whence the bee gathereth it. Bacon.

A work of this nature is not to be performed upon one leg, and should smell of oil if duly handled. Brown.

If you have a silver laceupon, and the butter smells of smoke, lay the fault upon the cook. Swift.

3. To have a particular tincture or smack of any quality.
My unlo'd name, the auterfulness of my life,
Will to your accusation overweigh,
That you shall hiss in your own report, Shakespeare.
And smell of calumny.
Down with the nose, take the bridge quite away
Of him that his particular to forefend, Snells from the general weal. Shakespeare.

S M I

A man so smelling of the people's lee,
The court receiv'd him first for charity. Dryden.

To practise the act of smelling.
Whoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall be cut off. Exod. xxx. 28.

I had a mind to know, whether they would find out the treasure, and whether smelling enabled them to know what is good for their nourishment. Addison's Spectator.

SMELL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Power of smelling; the sense of which the nose is the organ.
Next, in the nostrils the doth use the smell,
As God the breath of life in them did give;
So makes all airs, whereby we breathe, and live. Davies.

2. Scent; power of affecting the nose.
The sweetest smell in the air is the white double violet, which comes twice a year. Bacon.

All sweet smells have joined with them some earthy or crude odours. Bacon.

Pleasant smells are not confined unto vegetables, but found in divers animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

There is a great variety of smells, though we have but a few names for them: the smell of a violet and of mulk, both sweet, are as distinct as any two smells. Locke.

SMELLER. n. f. [from smell.] He who smells.
SMELLFEAST. n. f. [smell and feast.] A parasite; one who haunts good tables.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten; whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smellfeast that spunges upon other people's treasuries. Le'Strange.

SMELT. The preterite and participle pass. of smell.
SMELT. n. f. [smelt, Saxon.] A small sea fish.

The smelters come up to the alayers. Woodward on Fossils.

To SMERK. v. a. [smearan, Saxon.] To smile wantonly.
Certain gentlemen of the gown, whose awkward, spruce, prim, sneering, and smirking countenances have got good preferment by force of cringing. Swift.

SMERKY. adj. Nice; smart; jauntty.
SMIRK. n. f.

Seest, how bragg yon bullock bears,
So smirks, to smooch his pricked ears;
His horns been as brags as rainbow bends,
His dew-lap as liss as liss of Kent. Spenser.

SMELT. n. f. A fish.
SMELT. n. f. [Diminutive of smack, smocket, smicket.] The under garment of a woman.

To SMIGHT. For smite.
As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encount'reth in his flight,
Through widest air making his idle way,
That would his rightful ravin rend away:
With hideous horror both together smight,
And souce so fore that they the heavens affray. Fa. Queen.

To SMILE. v. n. [smeylen, Dutch.]

1. To contract the face with pleasure; to express gladness by the countenance.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakespeare.

the wrought smock came through it in many places. Sidney.
How do't thou look now? oh ill-star'd wench!
Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at court;
This look of thine will hurt my soul from heav'n. Shakespeare.
Their apparel was linnen breeches, and over that a smock
close girt unto them with a towel. Saunders.

2. Though Artemisia talks by fits,
Of counsels, clafficks, fathers, wits;
Reads Malbranche, Boyle, and Locke;
Yet in some things, methinks, she fails,
'Twere well, if she would pair her nails,
And wear a cleaner smock. Swift.

3. Smock is used in a ludicrous kind of composition for any thing relating to women.
At smock treat n, matron, I believe you;
And if I were your husband; but when I Trust to your cob-web bosoms any other,
Let me there die a fly, and feast you, spider. Ben Jonson.
Plague on his smock-loyalty!
I hate to see a brave bold fellow fotted,
Made four and fenseless, turn'd to whey by love. Dryden.

SMOCKFACE. adj. [smock and face.] Palefaced; maidenly.
Old chiefs reflecting on their former deeds,
Disdain to rust with batter'd invalids;

That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog. *Shak. H. VI.*The she's even of the savage herd are safe:
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. *Dryden's Don Sebastian.*Now, for the bare pick'd bone of majesty, Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarls in the gentle eyes of peace. *Shakespeare's K. John.*An angry cur
Snarls while he feeds. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted. *Dryden.*The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declin'd from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage-noose,
As almost ev'ry couple does:
Sometimes my plague! sometimes my darling! *Prior.*Killing to-day, to-morrow snarling. *Prior.*Where hast thou been snarling odious truths, and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases? *Congreve.*To SNARL. v. a. To intangle; to embarrass. I know not that this sense is well authorized.Confused snarled consciences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread. *Decay of Piety.*SNA'RLER. n. f. [from snarl.] One who snarls; a growling, surly, quarrelsome, insulting fellow.Should stupid libels grieve your mind,
You soon a remedy may find;
Lie down obscure, like other folks,
Below the lash of snarlers jokes. *Swift.*SNA'RY. adj. [from snare.] Intangling; insidious.Spiders in the vault their snary webs have spread. *Dryden.*SNA'Y. n. f. The snuff of a candle.It first burned fair, 'till some part of the candle was consumed, and the sawdust gathering about the snay; but then it made the snay big and long, and burn dulkily, and the candle waited in half the time of the wax pure. *Bacon's Nat. History.*To SNATCH. v. a. [snacken, Dutch.]

1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth. *Hooker.*Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain. *Milton.*Life's dream hurries all too fast:
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take. *Pope.*She snatch'd a sheet of Thule from her bed:
Sudden she flies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. *Pope's Dunciad.*They, falling down the stream,
Are snatch'd immediately by the quick-ey'd trout
Of darting salmon. Thomson's Summer.

2. To transport or carry suddenly.

He had scarce performed any part of the office of a bishop in the dioceses of London, when he was snatched from thence, and promoted to Canterbury. *Clarendon.*Oh nature!
Inrich me with the knowledge of thy works,
Snatch me to heaven. *Thomson's Autumn.*To SNATCH. v. n. To bite, or catch eagerly at something.Lords will not let me: if I had a monopoly on't, they would have part on't; nay, the ladies too will be snatching. *Shakespeare's King Lear.*He shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry. *Is. ix. 20.*Lycus, swifter of his feet,
Runs, doubles, winds and turns, amidst the war;
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. *Dryden's En.*SNATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A hasty catch.

2. A short fit of vigorous action.

After a shower to weeding a snatch;
More easily weed with the root to dispatch. Tusser.

3. A small part of any thing; a broken part.

She chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distresses. *Shakespeare's Hamlet.*In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacations would permit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

4. A broken or interrupted action; a short fit.

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his. *Shakespeare's Cymbeline.*They move by fits and snatches; so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a motion, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal. *Wilkins's Dædalus.*We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year. Spectator.

SNE

5. A quip; a shuffling answer.
Come, leave your snatches, and yield me a direct answer.
Shakel. Measure for Measure.
- SNA'TCHER. n. f. [from snatch.] One that snatches, or takes any thing in haste.
They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.
—We do not mean the courting snatchers only,
But fear the main intentment of the Scot. Shaksp. H. V.
- SNA'TCHINGLY. adv. [from snatching.] Hastily; with interruption.
- TO SNEAK. v. n. [from snack, Saxon; snige, Danish.]
1. To creep sily; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.
Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Comes snaking, and fo fucks her princely eggs. Shaksp. Lear.
Snack not away, fir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Shaksp. Lear.
Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You kulk'd behind the fence, and snack'd away. Dryden.
I ought not to turn my back, and to snack off in silence,
And leave the truth to be baffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.
He snack'd into the grave.
A monarch's half and half a harlot's slave. Daniel.
Are you all ready? Here's your music here:
Author, snack off; we'll tickle you, my dear. Moor.
2. To behave with meanness and servility; to crouch; to truckle.
I need salute no great man's threshold, snack to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my confidence. South.
Nothing can support minds drooping and snaking, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others as bad. South's Sermons.
When int'rest calls off all her snaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell. Pepe.
Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will snacks a scriv'ner, an exceeding knave. Pepe.
- SNEAKER. n. f. A large vessel of drink.
I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons about a snacker of five gallons. Speclator.
- SNEAKING. participial adj. [from snack.]
1. Servile; mean; low.
2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parsimonious.
SNEAKINGLY. adv. [from snaking.] Meanly; servilely.
Do all things like a man, not snakingly:
Think the king sees thee still. Herbert.
While you snaking's submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourage'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.
- SNEAKUP. n. f. [from snack.] A cowardly, creeping, indolent scoundrel. Obsolete.
The prince is a jack, a snackup; and, if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. Shak. H. IV.
- TO SNEAP. v. a. [This word seems a corruption of snip, or of snapp, to reprimand. Perhaps snapp is in that sense from snib, snibbe, Danish.]
Men shulde him snibbe bitterly. Chaucer.
1. To reprimand; to check.
2. To nip.
- What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No snapping winds at home. Shaksp. Lear.
- SNEAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.
My lord, I will not undergo this snapp without reply: you call honourable boldness impudent sauciness: if a man will courtly and say nothing, he is virtuous. Shaksp. Henry IV.
- TO SNEB. v. a. [Properly to snib. See SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.
Which made this foolish briar wax so bold,
That on a time he cast him to scold,
And snibbe the good oak, for he was old. Spenser.
- TO SNEER. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snare and snort.]
1. To show contempt by looks: nosq. suspendere admodum.
2. To insultate contempt by covert expressions.
The wolf was by, and the fox in a snaring way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.
I could be content to be a little snared at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Pepe.
If there has been any thing expressed with too much feve-rity, it will fall upon those snaring or daring writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency. Watts.
3. To utter with grimace.
I have not been snaring fulsome lies, and nauseous flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.
4. To show awkward mirth.
I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they snared at every word spoken by each other. Taylor.

SNI

- SNEER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.
Did not the snier of more impartial men
At sense and virtue, balance all again. Pepe.
2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.
Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one nor the majesty of the other could secure them from a snier. Watts.
- TO SNEEZE. v. n. [from sniezen, Saxon; niesen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.
If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes 'till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes. Bacon.
If the pain be more intense and deeper within amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing. Wise man's Surgery.
To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet thee landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.
If any thing oppres the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray on the Creation.
Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce head-ach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbuthnot.
An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently. Gulliver's Travels.
- SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.
I heard the rack
As earth and sky would mingle; but These flaws, though mortals fear them
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholesome as a sneeze
To man's less universe, and soon are gone. Milt. Par. Reg.
We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there past acclamations successively through the city. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SNEEZEWORD. n. f. [from sniezen, Latin.] A plant.
It hath radiated flowers, whose disk consists of many florets;
but the borders are composed of half florets: the embryos are lodged in the flowercup, which is scaly, each of which becomes one slender seed. Miller.
- SNET. n. f. [Among hunters.] The fat of a deer. Ditt.
- SNEW. The old pretense of To snow. Ditt.
- TO SNIB. v. a. [from snibbe, Danish. See SNEAP.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.
Asked for their pass by every quib,
That list at will them to revile or snib. Hudibras's Tell.
- SNICK and SNEE. n. f. A combat with knives.
Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snee was in fashion, a boatswain with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men beat him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sticking in his flesh, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth. Wise man's Surgery.
- TO SNICKER, or SNIGGER. v. n. To laugh sily, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Ditt.
- TO SNIFF. v. n. [from sniffen, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly up
the nose.
So then you look'd scornful, and sniff'd at the dean,
As, who should say, now am I skinny and lean? Swift.
- TO SNIFFLE. v. n.
Sniffing is thus performed: in a warm day, when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait hide herself, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees. Watts's Angler.
- TO SNIP. v. a. [from snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissors.
The sinus should be laid open, which was snit up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissors, and the incised lips dressed. Wise man's Surgery.
When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, fir Roger used to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of scissors for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbuthnot.
Putting one blade of the scissors up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.
- SNIP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A single cut with scissors.
What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slish and slash, Shaksp. Lear.
Like to a censor in a barber's shop.
The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open;
therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Watts.
2. A final threat.
Those we keep within compass by small snips of emplat, hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wise man's Surgery.

SNO

3. A snare; a snack. A low word.
He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend. L'Estrange.
- SNIP. n. f. [from snippe, German; snize, Saxon; snit, Dutch.]
1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.
The external evident causes of the atra bilis are a high fermenting diet; as old cheese, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans. Floyer.
2. A fool; a blockhead.
Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe, Shaksp. Othello.
But for my sport and profit.
- SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] One that snips.
- SNIPPET. n. f. [from snip.] A small part; a share.
Witches simpling, and on gibbets
Cutting from malefactors snippets; Hudibras.
Or from the pillory tips of ears.
- SNIPSNAP. n. f. [A cant word formed by reduplication of snap.]
Tart dialogue.
Dennis and dissonance, and captious art,
And snipsnap short, and interruption smart. Pope's Dunciad.
- SNITE. n. f. [from snite, Saxon.] A snipe. This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.
Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rails, snites, and wood-dove. Carew.
- TO SNITE. v. a. [from snite, Saxon.] To blow the nose.
Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze;
in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew's Cosmol.
- SNIVEL. n. f. [from snivel, German.] Snout; the running of the nose.
TO SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To run at the nose.
2. To cry as children.
Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks; and whether we go to our graves snivelling or sniffling, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.
Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his ax into the water. L'Estrange.
- SNIVELLER. n. f. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamentor.
He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.
- TO SNORE. v. n. [from snorcken, Dutch.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.
I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. B. Johnf.
Whole railing heroes, and whose wounded gods,
Makes some suspect he snores as well as nods. Rowe's Roman.
He may lie quietly in his shades, and snore on to doomday for me; unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.
- Is not yonder Proteus' cave?
It is; and in it lies the god asleep;
And snoring by
We may decry
The monsters of the deep. Dryden's Albion.
- 'Twas Acme's and Septimius' life;
The lady sigh'd, the lover snored. Prior.
- The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddl'd gore confus'd. Addison.
- SNORE. n. f. [from snor, Saxon; from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.
The surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their nostrils.
Shaksp. Macbeth.
- TO SNORT. v. n. [from snorcken, Dutch.] To blow through the nose as a high mettled horse.
The snorting of his horses was heard. Jer. viii. 16.
The fiery war-horse paws the ground,
And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's found. Addison.
From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire,
Drooping ambrosial foams and snorting fire. Addison's Ovid.
He with wide nostrils, snorting, flims the wave. Thomson.
- SNOUT. n. f. [from snout, Saxon; snut, Dutch.] The mucus of
the nose.
Thus, when a greedy flover once has thrown His snout into the muck, 'tis all his own. Swift.
- SNOUTTY. adj. [from snout.] Full of snout.
This figure South my husband took in a dirty snouty-nosed boy. Arbuthnot.
- SNOUT. n. f. [from snout, Dutch.]
1. The nose of a beast.
His nose in the air, his snout in the skies.
In shape a beagle's whelp throughout,
With broader forehead, and a sharper snout. Dryden.

SNU

2. The nose of a man, in contempt.
Her subtle snout
Did quickly wind his meaning out. Hudibras.
But when the date of Nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetick snout. Hudibras.
What Ethiop lips he has,
How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryd. Juven.
Charm'd with his eyes, and chin, and snout,
Her pocket-glass drew sily out;
And grew enamour'd with her phiz,
As just the counterpart of his. Swift.
3. The nosel or end of any hollow pipe.
SNOUTED. adj. [from snout.] Having a snout.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.
- SNOW. n. f. [from snop, Saxon; snie, Dutch.] The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops. Locke.
Benaiah flew a lion in a pit, in time of snow. 2 Sa. xxiii.
Drought and heat consume snow waters. Job xxiv. 19.
He gives the Winter's snow her airy birth,
And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth. Sandys.
- TO SNOW. v. n. [from snapan, Saxon; snuewen, Dutch.] To have snow fall.
TO SNOW. v. a. To scatter like snow.
If thou be'st born to see strange lights,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
'Till age snows white hairs on thee. Donne.
- SNOWBALL. n. f. [from snow and ball.] A round lump of con-gelated snow.
They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling. Hayward.
His bulky folly gathers as it goes, Dryden.
And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows.
A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.
- SNOWBROTH. n. f. [from snow and broth.] Very cold liquor.
Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton flings and motions of the sense. Shaksp. Lear.
- SNOWDROP. n. f. [from snor and drop, Latin.] An early flower.
The flower is, for the most part, composed of six leaves, in form of a lily, which are sometimes equal, and sometimes unequal and pendulous: the empalement becomes a roundish fruit, which is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds: to which may be added, it hath a bulbous root. Miller.
When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of Winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle on Colours.
- The little shape, by magick pow'r,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flow'r;
A flow'r, that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgins sacred, and the snowdrop styl'd. Tickell.
- SNOW-WHITE. adj. [from snow and white.] White as snow.
A snow-white bull shall on your throne be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryden's Æn.
- SKOWY. adj. [from snow.]
1. White like snow.
So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shews. Shaksp. Lear.
Now I see thy jolly train:
Snowy headed Winter leads,
Spring and Summer next succeeds;
Yellow Autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year.
The blushing ruby on her snowy breast,
Render'd its parting whiteness more conceit. Prior.
2. Abounding with snow.
These first in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air. Milton's Par. Lost.
As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
By Afracan, over the snowy plains,
Retires. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- SNUB. n. f. [from snubbe, Dutch, a nose, or knobel, a joint of the finger.] A jag; a snag; a knot in wood.
Lifting up his dreadful club on high,
All arm'd with ragged snubs and knotty grain,
Him thought at first encounter to have slain. Fairy Queen.
- TO SNUB. v. a. [Rather to snib. See SNEAP, SNEB, SNIB.]
1. To check; to reprimand.
2. To nip.
Near the seashores the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but toward the sea are so snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or thaven off. Rey.
- TO SNUB. v. n. [from snuffen, Dutch.] To sob with convulsion.
TO SNUDGE. v. n. [from snuger, Danish.] To lie idle, close, or snug.

SNU

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And snuff in quiet; now he scorns increase;
Now all day spares. Herbert.

SNUFF. n. f. [snuf; Dutch, snot.]

1. Snot. In this sense it is not used.

2. The useless excrement of a candle: whence maucher la chandelle.

My great affliction,
If I could bear longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your opposites wills,
My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakspeare, King Lear.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:
Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;
For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Dome.

The snuff-dishes shall be of pure gold. Es. xxv. 38.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks. Will.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!

To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I'd' dungeon by a snuff. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.
A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped into the vapour. Addison on Italy.

5. Repentment expressed by snuffing; perverse repentment.
What hath been seen
Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again. L'Estrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to every atom just
The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.

7. To snuff. v. a. [snuffen, Dutch.]

1. To draw in with the breath.
A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air against rain. Bacon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars and promises a more successful fight. Dryden.

The youth,
Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leaps full forward on a shining spear. Dryden's Æn.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert. Addison.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brack-denstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in. Swift.

2. To scent.
The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind. Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves. Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the fly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues. Tickell.

3. To crop the candle.
The late queen's gentlewoman!
To be her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it.
And out it goes. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be better dressed, and our lights snuffed, and our religion more active.
Taylor's worthy Communicant.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.

4. To snuff. v. n.

1. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.
The fury fires the pack, they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden, Æn.

2. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

3. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

4. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

5. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

15. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

16. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

17. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

18. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

19. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

20. To snuff; to draw breath by the nose.

SO

Says Hampus, sir, my master bad me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. King.

2. To snuff in contempt.

Ye said, what a weariness it is, and ye have snuff'd at it.

SNUFFBOX. n. f. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuffbox on the table, and goeth away, lock it up as part of your vails. Swift.

Sir Plume, of amber snuffboxes justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane. Pope.

SNUFFERS. n. f. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open.

SNUFFLE. v. n. [snufflen, Dutch.] To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdainful that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could cspy the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air in pockets shut,
Sound filthier than from the gut. Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who snuck and snuffled, and considered on't. L'Estrange.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites some lamentable rhyme;
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffing at nose, and croaking in his throat. Dryden.

3. To snug. v. n. [snuger, Dutch.] To lie close; to snuggle.

There snuggling well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amis, so to be shent. Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snuggling together, Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber. L'Estrange.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience.
They spy'd a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind. Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.
At Will's
Lie snug, and hear what critics say. Swift.

3. Silly or insidiously close.
Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snay young Damon's goat? Dryden.

4. To snug. v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.

So snug, [i. e. Saxons, snug, Dutch; snug, German.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

As whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn that war'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay. Milton.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valombrosa, where th' Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'r, so thick bestrew'd Abject and lost lay these. Milton.

Tir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky. Pope.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To such a degree.

Why is his chariot so long in coming?
Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight,
Will ruin it? Or is't blind chance
That still desires new flats? Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie;
Where the pow'r that charms us lies,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller.

I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed. Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are. Addison's Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, so wife we're grown;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

3. In such a manner.
4. It is regularly answered by as or that, but they are sometimes omitted.

So crown'd the mighty combatants, that hell Grew darker at their frown. Milton.

There's no such thing, as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;
For though fame long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingl'd so and so. Suckling.

That doth not tie me now from chuing new. Suckling.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard caution upon our foil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so. Locke.

I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice. Locke.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependant. Addison.

5. In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll;
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not so. Milton.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there. Dryden.

Does this deserve to be rewarded so?

Did you come here a stranger or a foe? Dryden.

It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters whether they be so or not. Tillotson.

No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so, how to value those inestimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his train. Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution, by some more unaccountable way, this is certain that so it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The gods, though loth, yet was constrain'd to obey;
Below the earth, might suffer'd to be to say:
So back again him brought to living light. Fairy Queen.

If he set insidiously and slyly to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him, and so all that he hath to do is to endeavour by prayer and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to deepest hell. Milton's Paradise Lost.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition: answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray,
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten;
As here I part without an angry thought. Rowe.

So may kind rains their vital moist'ne yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that; modo.

Be not sad:
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unprov'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
May the remaining few know only friendship:
So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart. Rowe.

A partner there; I will give up mankind.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another, answering to as.

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a

11. It sometimes answers to the word or sentence going before, and returns the sense.

Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so. Denham.

Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know. Denham.

Angling is something like poetry, men are to be born so. Walton's Angler.

One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so. Burnet.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;
For having once been guilty, well they know so. Dryden.

To a revengful prince they still are so. Dryden.

He was great ere fortune made him so. Dryden.

I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher; then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens. Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in that noble language peculiar to that great poet. Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so. Swift.

As to his ugly ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.

How sorrow shakes him!
So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.

When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it laid a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shakspeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning. Well.

O, so, and had you a council

Madam?

15. It sometimes is little more than an expletive, though it implies some latent or furd comparison.

An affronting is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary. Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.

There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so;
if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakspeare.

I will never bear a base mind: if it be my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shak.

17. A form of petition.

Ready are th' appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shakspeare.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.

So much as you admire the beauty of his verse, his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after some thing done or known.

I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So so. Shakspeare's Othello.

So so; it works: now mistress, fit you fast. Dryden.

20. So so. [i. e. so, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amils nor well.

He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so: and yet 'tis well. Shakspeare.

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
There deep Galeus soaks the yellow sands. Dryden.
Thou whole life's a dream of lazy pleasure:
'Tis all thy bus'ness, bus'ness how to thum
To bask thy naked body in the sun;
Supplying thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.
Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in,
prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term.
Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.
A greater sparer than a faver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garisons, and his seatings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer. Watson.

SOAP. n. f. [sapo, Saxon; sapo, Latin.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.
Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil; its virtues are cleaning, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap. Arbutus on Aliments.
He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers soap. Malachi.
A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours. Newton's Opticks.
Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodw.
Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or four lands. Mortimer.
As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-tee or soap-suds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SOAPBOILER. n. f. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.
A soapboiler condoles with me on the duties on cattle-soap.
Addison's Spectator.

SOAPWORT. n. f. Is a species of campion. Milton.
To SOAR. v. n. [sorare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings.
Feather'd foon and fledg'd,
They sum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.
'Tis but a base ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakespeare.
How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakespeare.
Valour soars above.

What the world calls misfortune and afflictions. Addison.
3. To rise high.
Who aspires must down as low
As high he soar'd. Milton.

Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar.
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more. Dryden.
When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

SOAR. n. f. [from the verb.] Towering flight.
Within soar
Of tow ring eagles, to all the fowls he seems A phoenix. Milton.

To SOB. v. n. [scob, scab, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopoeia c'pied from the sound.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.
When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shakespeare.
As if her life and death lay on his saying,
Some tears she shed, with fits and sobbing mixt;
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying. Fairfax.
She sigh'd, she sob'd, and furious with despair,
She rent her garments, and the tore her hair. Dryden.
When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Lodge on Education.

He sobbing fees
The glades, mid-opening to the golden day. Thomson.
SOB. n. f. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.
Break heart, or choke with sobs my hated breath;
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryden.
There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud fierce, and shriller squall. Swift.

SOBER. adj. [sobrius, Latin; sobre, French.]
1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.
Live a sober, righteous, and godly life. Common Prayer.
The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Taylor's Works.
No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and foolishness of his neighbour. South's Sermons.

2. Not overpowered by drink.
A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double, as much as if he had done the same being sober. Flores.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.
Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raging mad; there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and blustering. Dryden.
No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of elapsing without breaking his neck. Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.
This same young sober-blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh.
Cicero travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writ-
ter. Abbot's Description of the World.
Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. Tit. ii. 6.
The governor of Scotland being of great courage, and sober judgment, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field. Hayward.
These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace. Clarendon.
Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it. Clarendon.
To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious, till'd them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists. Milton.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.
Petruccio shall Offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakespeare.
Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakespeare.
Twilight grey
Had in her sober liv'ry all things clad. Milton.
What parts gay France from sober Spain,
A little rising rocky chain:
Of men born south or north th' hill,
Those seldom move; these ne'er stand still. Prior.
Swift and he despis'd the face of fate,
The sober follies of the wife and great. Pope.
See her sober over a famper, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

To SOBER. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sober.
A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again. Pope.

SOBERLY. adv. [from sober.]
1. Without intemperance.
2. Without madness.
3. Temperately; moderately.
Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers. Bacon.

4. Coolly; calmly.
Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly laying on the blows slowly. Locke.
SOBERNESS. n. f. [from sober.]
1. Temperance in drink.
Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Common Prayer.
2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.
A person noted for his soberness and skill in spagyric preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well. Hag.
The soberness of Virgil might have shewn him the difference. Dryden's Daphnia.

SORRETTY. n. f. [from sobrietas, French; sobrius, Latin.]
1. Temperance in drink; soberness.
Drunkness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against than gluttony; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking. Taylor.
2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.
3. General temperance.
In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister, more than that he which there be in the footsteps of nature, any such transmission of immaterial virtues and what the force of imagination is.

Bacon's Natural History.
Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and stupid old infancy?
Dryden.

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.
Mirth makes them not mad;
Nor sobriety sad. Denham.
SOCCAGE. n. f. [soc, French, a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Latin.] In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee.
All services due for land being knight's service, or soccage;
so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soc- cage is of three kinds; a soccage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt;
and such socmen hold not by certain service. Cowell.
The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

SOCIABLE. adj. [sociable, French; sociabilis, Latin.]
1. Fit to be conjoined.
Another law toucheth them as they are sociable parts united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Haker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.
To make man mild, and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline. Addison's Cat.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.
Them thus employ'd, beheld
With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit, that design'd
To travel with Tobias. Milton.

4. Inclined to company.
In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that so- ciable and exposed age. Wotton.

SOCIABLENESS. [from sociable.]
1. Inclination to company and converse.

SO'FA. n. f. [I believe an eastern word.] A splendid seat covered with carpets.
 The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, 'tis my Abdallah! Guardian.
SOFT. adj. [soft, Saxon; soft, Dutch.]
 1. Not hard.
 Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch. Locke.
 Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the jejuneness of the spirits, which if a greater degree, make them not only hard, but fragile. Bacon.
 Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
 And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.
 2. Not rugged; not rough.
 What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings houses. Matth.
 3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.
 Spirits can either soft assume; so soft
 And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.
 A few divines of soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance. K. Charles.
 One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.
 5. Tender; timorous.
 What he hath done famously, he did it to that end; tho' soft confounded men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 However soft within themselves they are,
 To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.
 Curst be the verse, how well so'er it flow,
 That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
 Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
 Or from the soft ey'd virgin steal a tear. Pope.
 6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.
 Would my heart were flint like Edward's;
 Or Edward's soft and pitiful like mine. Shakespeare.
 Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.
 Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay,
 His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.
 7. Meek; civil; complaisant.
 Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
 Hast not the soft way, which thou do'st confess
 Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim
 In asking their good loves. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 8. Placid; still; easy.
 On her soft axle while the paces even,
 She bears the soft with the smooth air along. Milton.
 There soft-extended, to the murmuring sound
 Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.
 9. Effeminate; viciously nice.
 This sense is also mistress of an art
 Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;
 Though this dear art doth little good impart,
 Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell. Davies.
 An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Notes on the Odyssey.

Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakespeare.
 But soft, my mule, the world is wide,
 And all at once was not deserv'd. Suckling.
 To SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]
 1. To make soft; to make less hard.
 Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon's Natural History.
 Their arrows point they soften in the flame,
 And founding hammers break its barbed frame. Cop.
 2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obdurate; to mollify.
 I will soften stony hearts.
 Our friends feel not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Adams.
 I would correct the harsh expressions of one party by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.
 3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.
 Call round her tomb each object of desire,
 Bid her be all that cheers or softens life,
 The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.
 Mufick the fiercest griefs can charm;
 Mufick can soften pain to ease,
 And make despair and madness please. Pope.
 4. To make less harsh.
 He bore his great commission in his look,
 But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.
 To SOFTEN. v. n.
 1. To grow less hard.
 Many bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften; as iron in the forge. Bacon's Natural History.
 2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.
 He may soften at the sight of the child;
 The silence often of pure innocence
 Persuades, when speaking fails. Shakespeare.
SOFTLY. adv. [from soft.]
 1. Without hardness.
 2. Not violently; not forcibly.
 Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound; as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.
 3. Not loudly.
 Ahab rent his cloaths, and went softly. 1 Kings. xxi. 27.
 In this dark silence softly leave the town,
 And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.
 4. Gently; placidly.
 Death will dismiss me,
 And lay me softly in my native dust.
 To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust.
 She with a wreath of myrtle crowns the head,
 And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden's Ænecid.
 5. Mildly; tenderly.
 The king must die;
 Though pity softly plead within my soul,
 Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.
SOFTNER. n. f. [from soft.]
 1. That which makes soft.
 2. One who palliates.
 Those softners, and expedient-mongers, shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.
SOFTNESS. n. f. [from soft.]
 1. The quality of being soft.
 2. Quality contrary to hardness.
Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon's Natural History.

SOI

 3. Mildness; kindness.
 A wife man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness; or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Watts's Logic.
 4. Civility; gentleness.
 Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.
 5. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.
 So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.
 He was not deluged with the softness of the court. Clarend.
 6. Timorousness; pusillanimity.
 This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason, is virtue: if without it, is softness, or obliquity. Grew.
 7. Quality contrary to hardness.
Softness of sounds is distinct from the exility of sounds. Bacon.
 8. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be affected.
 Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit, which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seem'd evermore loth to give sentence against any thing publicly received in the church of God. Hooker.
 9. Mildness; meekness.
 For contemplation he and valour form'd,
 For softness he and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
 Her fubborn look
 This softness from thy finger took.
SOHO. interj. A form of calling from a distant place.
 To SOIL. v. a. [soil, Saxon; soelen, old German; soiller, French.]
 1. To foul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to fully.
 A filly man in simple weeds forlorn,
 And soiled with dust of the long dried way. Fairy Queen.
 Although some heretics have abus'd this text, yet the fun is not soiled in passage. Bacon's Holy War.
 If I soil
 Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.
 I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
 With the rank vapours of this in-worm mould. Milton.
 Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
 Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
 Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
 Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.
 One who cou'd n't for a taste o' th' flesh come in,
 Licks the soil'd earth.
 While reeking with a mangled Omph's blood.
 If the eye-glass be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.
 An absent hero's bed they fought to soil.
 An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.
 2. To dung; to manure.
 Men now present, just as they soil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.
SOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.
 By indirect ways
 I met this crown; and I myself know well
 How troublesome it fate upon my head:
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet;
 For all the soil of the achievement goes
 With me into the earth. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 That would be a great soil in the new glofs of your marriage. Shakespeare.
 Vex'd I am with passions,
 Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakespeare.
 I would have the soil of her fair rape
 Wip'd off. Shakespeare.
 A lady's honour must be touch'd,
 Which, nice as ermines, will not bear a soil. Dryden.
 2. [So, French; solem, Latin.] Ground; earth, considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.
 Judgment may be made of waters by the soil whereupon they run. Bacon's Natural History.
 Her spots thou see'st
 As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce
 Fruits in her soften'd soil. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessities and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.
 3. Land; country.
 Dorset, that with a fearful soil
 Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,

SOL

This fair alliance shall call home
 To high promotions. Shakespeare.
 O unexpected stroke, worse than of death!
 Must I thus leave thee, paradise! thus leave
 Thee, native soil! these happy walks and shades;
 Fit haunts of gods. Milton.
 4. Dung; compost.
 The haven has been stopp'd up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there insensibly by the sea. Addis.
 Improve land by manure, dung, and other sort of soils. Martinet's Husbandry.
SO'LINES. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; foulness.
 Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver. Bacon.
SO'LURE. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; pollution.
 He merits well to have her,
 Not making any scruple of her soilure. Shakespeare.
 To SO'JOURN. v. n. [sojourn, French; segiornare, Italian.] To dwell any where for a time; to live as not at home; to inhabit as not in a settled habitation. Almost out of use.
 If, till the expiration of your month,
 You will return and sojourn with my sister, Shakespeare.
 Dismissing half your train, come then to me.
 Th' advantage of his absence took the king,
 And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's. Shakespeare.
 How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how creeps acquaintance? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 Here dwells he; though he sojourn every where.
 In progress, yet his standing house is here. Donne.
 The sojourn of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. Ezra. xii. 40.
 The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourn'd three days. Hayward.
 To sojourn in that land
 He comes invited. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home. Atterbury.
SO'JOURN. n. f. [sojour, French, from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.
 The princes, France and Burgundy,
 Long in our court have made their am'rous sojourn. Shakespeare.
 There I revisit now,
 Escap'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
 In that obscure sojourn. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Scarce view'd the Galilean towns,
 And once a year Jerusalem, few days
 Short sojourn. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
SO'JOURNER. n. f. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.
 We are strangers and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow. 1 Chron. xxix. 16.
 Waves o' earth
 Buries, and his Memphian chivalry,
 While with perfidious hatred they purst'd
 The sojourners of Gothen. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Not for a night, or quick revolving year,
 Welcome an owner, not a sojourner. Dryden.
 To SO'LACE. v. a. [solacium, old French; solazzare, Italian; solatium, Latin.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.
 We will with some strange pastime solace them. Shakespeare.
 The birds with song
 Solac'd the woods. Milton.
 To SOLACE. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. The neutral sense is obsolete.
 Give me leave to go;
 Sorrow would solace, and my age would ease. Shak. H. VI.
 One poor and loving child,
 But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
 And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight. Shakespeare.
 Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
 This sickly land might solace as before. Shakespeare. R. III.
SO'LACE. n. f. [solatium, Latin.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.
 If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy them this their solace; we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every such thing their tormentors. Hooker.
 Therein sat a lady fresh and fair,
 Making sweet solace to herself alone;
 Sometimes the fang as loud as lark in air,
 Sometimes the laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone. F. 2.
 Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 If I would delight my private hours
 With mufick or with poem, where to soon
 As in our native language can I find That solace? Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

SOL

Though fight be lost,
Life yet hath many soles, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad. Milton's Agonistes.
Through waters, and through flames I'll go,
Suff'ring and solace of thy woe. Prior.

SOLANDER. n. f. [soulandres, Fr.] A disease in horses. Diët.
SOLAR. adj. [solaire, French; solaris, Latin.]
SOLARY. adj. [solaire, French; solaris, Latin.]

1. Being of the sun.
The corpuscles that make up the beams of light be solar effluvioms, or minute particles of some ethereal substance, thrilling on one another from the lucid body. Boyle.
Instead of golden fruits,
By genial show'rs and solar heat supply'd,
Unfufferable Winter hath defac'd
Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste. Blackm.
2. Belonging to the sun.
They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar. Bacon.
Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solar miracles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.
The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,
And proud beside, as solar people are. Dryden.
4. Measured by the sun.
The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months. Holder on Time.

SOLD. n. f. [souldes, old French. Treux.] Military pay; warlike entertainment.
But were your will her sold to entertain,
And number'd be amongst knights of maidenhead,
Great guerdon, well I wot, should you remain,
And in her favour high be reckoned. Fairy Queen.

SOLDAN. n. f. [sultan,] The emperor of the Turks.
They at the soldan's chair def'd the best. Milton.
SOLDANEL. n. f. [soldanelis, Latin.] A plant.
It grows on the Alps, and several other mountainous places of Italy, Germany, and Hungary. They are plants of humble growth, seldom rising above six or eight inches high: their round leaves grow close to the ground, from between which the flower-stems arise, each of which have four or five flowers, of a fine blue colour, or of a snow-white, which hang down,
and are shaped like bells. Miller.

TO SOLDER. v. a. [solder, Fr. soldare, Ital. solidare, Latin.]
See SOLDER.
1. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallick cement.
A concave sphere of gold, filled with water, and soldered up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opt.

2. To mend; to unite any thing broken.
It becometh them not thus to solder up a broken cause, wneceof their first and last discourses will fall asunder. Hooker.
Wars twixt you twain would be Should solder up the rift. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Thou visible god,
That sold'st clove impossibilities,
And mak'st them kins! Shaksp. Timon.
Learn'd he was in med'nal lore;
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder. Hudibras.
The naked cynick's jar ne'er flames; if broken,
'Tis quickly solder'd, or a new bespoken. Dryd. jun. Juv.
At the Restoration the presbyterians, and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several schemes, to join against the church. Swift.

SOLDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Metallick cement.
Goldsmiths say, the coarsest stuff
Will serve for solder well enough. Swift.
SOLDERER. n. f. [from solder.] One that solders or mends.
SOLDIER. n. f. [soldat, Fr. from solidarius, low Latin, of solidus, a piece of money, the pay of a soldier; soldus, French.]
1. A fighting man; a warrior. Originally one who served for pay.
Your sister is the better soldier. Shaksp. King Lear.
Good Edward,
An older and a better soldier none. Shaksp. Macbeth.
A soldier,
Full of strange oaths, and hearded like a pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Ev'n in the cannon's mouth. Shaksp. Henry V.
This attempt
I'm soldier to, and will abide it with A prince's courage. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

I have not yet forgot I am a king:
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. Dryd. Don Sebastian.
2. It is generally used of the common men, as distinct from the commanders.
It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Spenser on Ireland.
SOLDIERLIKE. adj. [soldier and like.] Martial; warlike;
SOLDIERLY. adj. military; becoming a soldier.
Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, practice had now made them comparable to the best. Sidney.
I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of good command. Shaksp. Henry IV.
They according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the sword of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place. Hayward.
Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side. Carroll n.
SOLDIERSHIP. n. f. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier.
Thy father and myself in friendship
Fist tried our soldiership: he did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciple of the bravest. Shak. All's well that ends well.
By sea you throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land, Disfract your army, which doth most consist Of war-mark'd footmen. Shaksp. Henry V.

SOLDIERY. n. f. [from soldier.]
1. Body of military men; soldiers collectively.
The Memphian soldiery,
That swell'd the Erythrean wave, when wall'd,
The unfrozen waters marvelously flood. Philips.
I charge not the soldiery with ignorance and contempt of learning, without allowing exceptions. Swift.
2. Soldiership; martial skill.
Offering him, if he would exercise his courage in soldiery, he would commit some charge unto him under his lieutenant Philanax. Sidney.

SOLE. n. f. [solum, Latin.]
1. The bottom of the foot.
I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot he is all mirth. Shaksp. Much Ado about Nothing.
Tickling is most in the soles of the feet: the cause is the rareness of being touched there. Bacon's Nat. History.
The soles of the feet have great affinity with the head and the mouth of the stomach; as going wet-shod, to those that use it not, affecteth both. Bacon's Natural History.
Such resting found the sole of unblest feet. Milton.
In the make of the camel's foot, the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat callous skin; but very fit to travel in sandy places.
Ray on the Creation.

2. The foot.
To redeem thy woful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever-dying dread,
Hast wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet ceasest not thy weary soles to lead. Fairy Queen.
3. The bottom of the shoe.
Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.
—Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,
With nimble soles. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
A trade that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience;
which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.
On fortune's cap we are not the very button—Nor the sole of her shoe. Shaksp. Hamlet.
The caliga was a military shoe, with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs. Arbuthnot on Gains.
4. The part of any thing that touches the ground.
The strike-block is a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short joint. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels, and pipes. Mortim.

5. A kind of sea-fish.
Of flat fish, rays, thornbacks, soles, and flounders. Carver.
TO SOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with soles: as,
to sole a pair of shoes.
His feet were soled with a treble tuft of a clove short tawney down. Grew's Medica.

SOL

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they rent. Dryd.
Let sea and air, and earth and heav'n be made:
And it was so; and when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior.

2. [In law.] Not married.
Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife,
though he himself be sole and unmarried. Ayliffe.
SOLICISM. n. f. [solacismus.] Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solicism must be of more.
There is scarce a solicism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addison.

SOLELY. adv. [from sole.] Singly; only.
You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left solely heir to all his lands. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
This night's great business
Shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and mastery. Shaksp. Henry IV.
That the temperate heat of the climate solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety. Atterbury.

SOLENN. adj. [solemnus, French; solemnis, Latin.]
1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.
The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfleet.
2. Religiously grave.
His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd. Milton.

3. Awful; striking with seriousness.
Then 'gan he loudly through the house to call,
But no one care to answer to his cry;
There reign'd a solemn silence over all. Fairy Queen.
To twage with solemn touches troubled thoughts. Milton.
Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling. Milton.

4. Grave; affectedly serious.
When Steele reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanish-
eth: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing;
because though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn cox-
comb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn barrier. Swift.

SOLENNITY. n. f. [solemnitas, French; from solemn.]
1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.
Great was the cause; our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, fav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

2. Religious ceremony.
Awful ceremony or procession.
The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity. Shaksp. King John.
The moon, like to a silver bow,
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. Shaksp. Henry V.
There may be great danger in using such compositions in churches, at arraignments, plays, and solemnities. Bacon.
What funeral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity? Dryd.
Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgment may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here,
yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different. Atterbury.

3. Manner of acting awfully serious.
With much more skillful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny. Sid.
4. Gravity; steady seriousness.
The stateliness and gravity of the Spaniards shews itself in the solemnity of their language. Addison's Spectator.
5. Awful grandeur; grave stateliness; sober dignity.
A diligent decency was in Polycletus, above others; to whom though the highest praise be attributed by the most, yet some think he wanted solemnity. Wotton's Architecture.

6. Affected gravity.
Pythias, Virgilia, turn thy solemnity out o' door,
And go along with us. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
This speech ended with a solemnity of accent. Fem. Quixote.
SOLENNIZATION. n. f. [from solemnize.] The act of solemn-
izing; celebration.
Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage between Charles and Anne dutches of Bretagne, with whom he received the duchy of Bretagne. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO SOLEMNIZE. v. a. [solemnizer, French; from solemn.]
1. To dignify by particular formalities; to celebrate.
Darius in a great battle was deprived of life; his obsequies being no more solemnized by the tears of his partakers than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.
Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemn- ized in another. Hooker.

2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.
For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires men every way fit. Bacon.

SOLICITOUS.
Then 'gan they sprinkle all the parts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day. Fairy Queen.
The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize
his miraculous birth. Boyle's Seraphick Love.
Their choice nobility and flower
Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton's Agonist.

2. To perform religiously once a year.
What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized
even by our Saviour himself. Hooker.
SOLENNLY. adv. [from solemn.]
1. With annual religious ceremonies.
2. With formal gravity and stateliness.
There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly. Bacon's Essays.
3. With formal state.
Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shaksp. H. V.

4. With affected gravity.
The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdraw;
There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.
5. With religious seriousness.
To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader, that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection. Swift.
TO SOLICIT. v. a. [solicito, Latin.]
1. To importune; to intreat.
If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace,
Solicit for it straight. Shaksp. Othello.
We heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land. Shak. R. III.
How he solicits heav'n
Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shaksp. Henry V.
This in obedience hath my daughter shewn me,
And, more above, hath his solicitations,
As they fell out by time, by means and place,
All given to mine ear. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay,
To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milt. Par. Lost, b. x.
The guardian of my faith so false did prove,
As to solicit me with lawless love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

2. To call to action; to summon; to awake; to excite.
This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount
Her nat'ral graces, that extinguish art. Shaksp. H. VI.
That fruit solicited her longing eye. Milton.
Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses,
and force an entrance to the mind. Locke.
He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in for-bidden liberties. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To implore; to ask.
With that the wept again, 'till he again soliciting the conclusion of her story, then must you, said she, know the story of Amphialus. Sidney.
4. To attempt; to try to obtain.
I view my crime, but kindle at the view,
Repent old pleasures, and solicit new. Pope.
5. To disturb; to disquiet. A Latinism.
Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid;
I find your love, and would reward it too;
But anxious fears solicit my weak breast. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

SOLICITATION. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. Importunity; act of importuning.
I can produce a man
Of female seed, far abler to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
All his vast force, and drive him back to hell. Parad. Reg.
2. Invitation; excitement.
Children are surrounded with new things, which, by a constant solicitation of their senses, draw the mind constantly to them. Locke.
SOLICITOR. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. One who petitions for another.
Be merry, Calfio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die,
Than give thy cause away. Shaksp. Othello.
Honest minds will consider poverty as a recommendation in the person who applies himself to them, and make the justice of his cause the most powerful solicitor in his behalf. Addison.
2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.
For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires men every way fit. Bacon.

SOL

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they rent. Dryd.
Let sea and air, and earth and heav'n be made:
And it was so; and when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior.

2. [In law.] Not married.
Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife,
though he himself be sole and unmarried. Ayliffe.
SOLICISM. n. f. [solacismus.] Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solicism must be of more.
There is scarce a solicism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addison.

SOLELY. adv. [from sole.] Singly; only.
You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left solely heir to all his lands. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
This night's great business
Shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and mastery. Shaksp. Henry IV.
That the temperate heat of the climate solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety. Atterbury.

SOLENN. adj. [solemnus, French; solemnis, Latin.]
1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.
The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfleet.
2. Religiously grave.
His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd. Milton.

3. Awful; striking with seriousness.
Then 'gan he loudly through the house to call,
But no one care to answer to his cry;
There reign'd a solemn silence over all. Fairy Queen.
To twage with solemn touches troubled thoughts. Milton.
Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling. Milton.

4. Grave; affectedly serious.
When Steele reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanish-
eth: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing;
because though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn cox-
comb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn barrier. Swift.

SOLENNITY. n. f. [solemnitas, French; from solemn.]
1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.
Great was the cause; our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, fav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

2. Religious ceremony.
Awful ceremony or procession.
The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity. Shaksp. King John.
The moon, like to a silver bow,
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. Shaksp. Henry V.
There may be great danger in using such compositions in churches, at arraignments, plays, and solemnities. Bacon.
What funeral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity? Dryd.
Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgment may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here,
yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different. Atterbury.

3. Manner of acting awfully serious.
With much more skillful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny. Sid.
4. Gravity; steady seriousness.
The stateliness and gravity of the Spaniards shews itself in the solemnity of their language. Addison's Spectator.
5. Awful grandeur; grave stateliness; sober dignity.
A diligent decency was in Polycletus, above others; to whom though the highest praise be attributed by the most, yet some think he wanted solemnity. Wotton's Architecture.

6. Affected gravity.
Pythias, Virgilia, turn thy solemnity out o' door,
And go along with us. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
This speech ended with a solemnity of accent. Fem. Quixote.
SOLENNIZATION. n. f. [from solemnize.] The act of solemn-
izing; celebration.
Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage between Charles and Anne dutches of Bretagne, with whom he received the duchy of Bretagne. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO SOLEMNIZE. v. a. [solemnizer, French; from solemn.]
1. To dignify by particular formalities; to celebrate.
Darius in a great battle was deprived of life; his obsequies
being no more solemnized by the tears of his partakers than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.
Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemn-
ized in another. Hooker.

2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.
For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual
use for the king's service requires men every way fit. Bacon.

SOLICITOUS.
Then 'gan they sprinkle all the parts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day. Fairy Queen.
The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize
his miraculous birth. Boyle's Seraphick Love.
Their choice nobility and flower
Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton's Agonist.

2. To perform religiously once a year.
What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized
even by our Saviour himself. Hooker.
SOLENNLY. adv. [from solemn.]
1. With annual religious ceremonies.
2. With formal gravity and stateliness.
There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly. Bacon's Essays.
3. With formal state.
Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shaksp. H. V.

4. With affected gravity.
The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdraw;
There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.
5. With religious seriousness.
To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader, that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection. Swift.
TO SOLICIT. v. a. [solicito, Latin.]
1. To importune; to intreat.
If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace,
Solicit for it straight. Shaksp. Othello.
We heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land. Shak. R. III.
How he solicits heav'n
Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shaksp. Henry V.
This in obedience hath my daughter shewn me,
And, more above, hath his solicitations,
As they fell out by time, by means and place,
All given to mine ear. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay,
To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milt. Par. Lost, b. x.
The guardian of my faith so false did prove,
As to solicit me with lawless love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

2. To call to action; to summon; to awake; to excite.
This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount
Her nat'ral graces, that extinguish art. Shaksp. H. VI.
That fruit solicited her longing eye. Milton.
Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses,
and force an entrance to the mind. Locke.
He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in for-bidden liberties. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To implore; to ask.
With that the wept again, 'till he again soliciting the conclusion of her story, then must you, said she, know the story of Amphialus. Sidney.
4. To attempt; to try to obtain.
I view my crime, but kindle at the view,
Repent old pleasures, and solicit new. Pope.
5. To disturb; to disquiet. A Latinism.
Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid;
I find your love, and would reward it too;
But anxious fears solicit my weak breast. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

SOLICITATION. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. Importunity; act of importuning.
I can produce a man
Of female seed, far abler to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
All his vast force, and drive him back to hell. Parad. Reg.
2. Invitation; excitement.
Children are surrounded with new things, which, by a constant solicitation of their senses, draw the mind constantly to them. Locke.
SOLICITOR. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. One who petitions for another.
Be merry, Calfio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die,
Than give thy cause away. Shaksp. Othello.
Honest minds will consider poverty as a recommendation in the person who applies himself to them, and make the justice of his cause the most powerful solicitor in his behalf. Addison.
2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.
For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires men every way fit. Bacon.

SOL

SOLICITOUS. adj. [solicitus, Latin.] Anxious; careful; concerned. It has commonly about before that which causes anxiety; sometimes for or of. For is proper before something to be obtained.

Our hearts are pure, when we are not solicitous of the opinion and censures of men, but only that we do our duty. Taylor.
Enjoy the present, whatsoever it be, and be not solicitous for the future. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The colonel had been intent upon other things, and not enough solicitous to finish the fortifications. Clarendon.

In providing money for disbarring the armies, upon which they were marvelously solicitous, there arose a question. Clarendon.

They who were in truth zealous for the preservation of the laws, were solicitous to preserve the king's honour from any indignity, and his regal power from violation. Clarendon.

Laud attended on his majesty, which he would have been excused from, if that design had not been in view, to accomplish which he was solicitous for his advice. Clarendon.

There kept their watch the legions, while the grand

In council sat, solicitous what chance

Might intercept their emperor's sent. Milton's Par. Lost.

Without sign of boast, or sign of joy,

Solicitus and blank, he thus began. Milton's Parad. Reg.

No man is solicitous about the event of that which he has in his power to dispose of. South's Sermons.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.

The tender dame, solicitous to know

Whether her child should reach old age or no,

Consults the sage Tiresias. Addison.

SOLICITOUSLY. adv. [solicitous.] Anxiously; carefully.

The medical art being conversant about the health and life of man, doctrinal errors in it are to be solicitously avoided. Boyle.

He would surely have as solicitously promoted their learnings, as ever he obstructed it. Ducy of Petty.

SOLITUDE. n. f. [solitudo, Latin.] Anxiety; carefulness.

In this, by comparison, we behold the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their solitude and outward shews, and publick ostentation, their pride, and vanities. Raleigh.

If they would but provide for eternity with the same solitude, and real care, as they do for this life, they could not fail of heaven. Tillotson's Sermons.

They are to be known by a wonderful solitude for the reputation of their friends. Tatler.

SOLITRESS. n. f. [Feminine of solicitor.] A woman who petitions for another.

I had the most earnest solicitrress, as well as the fairest; and nothing could be refused to my lady Hyde. Dryden.

SOLID. adj. [solidus, Latin; solide, French.]

1. Not liquid; not fluid.

Land that ever burn'd

With solid, as the lake with liquid fire. Milton.

2. Not hollow; full of matter; compact; dense.

I hear his thund'ring voice refund,

And trampling feet that shake the solid ground. Dryden.

3. Having all the geometrical dimensions.

In a solid foot are 1728 solid inches, weighing 76 pound of rain water. Arbutnot on Coins.

4. Strong; firm.

The duke's new palace is a noble pile built after this manner, which makes it look very solid and majestick. Addison.

5. Sound; not weakly.

If persons devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and strong constitution of body, to bear the fatigue. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

6. Real; not empty; true; not fallacious.

This might satisfy sober and wise men, not with soft and specious words, but with pregnant and solid reasons. K. Charles.

The earth may of solid good contain

More plenty than the sun. Milton.

7. Not light; not superficial; grave; profound.

These, wanting wit, affect gravity, and go by the name of solid men; and a solid man is, in plain English, a solid solemn fool. Dryden.

SOLID. n. f. [In physics.] The part containing the fluids.

The first and most simple solids of our body are perhaps merely terrestrial, and incapable of any change or disease. Arb.

SOLIDITY. n. f. [Soliditas, Fr. soliditas, Lat. from solidus.]

1. Fulness of matter; not hollowness; density.

2. Firmness; hardness; compactness; density.

That which hinders the approach of two bodies, when they are moving one towards another, I call solidity. Locke.

The stone itself, whether naked or invell'd with earth, is not by its solidity secured, but washed down. Woodward.

3. Truth; not fallaciousness; intellectual strength; certainty.

The most known rules are placed in so beautiful a light, that they have all the graces of novelty; and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity. Addison's Spectator.

SOL

His fellow-peers have attended to his eloquence, and have been convinced by the solidity of his reasoning. Prior.

SOLIDLY. adv. [from solid.]

1. Firmly; densely; compactly.

2. Truly; on good grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the main end he is in the world for. Digby.

I look upon this as a sufficient ground for any rational man to take up his religion upon, and which I defy the subtlety atheist in the world solidly to answer; namely, that it is good to be sure. South.

SOLIDNESS. n. f. [from solid.] Solidity; firmness; density.

It beareth misfortune: the cause may be the closeness and solidness of the wood and pith of the oak. Bacon.

It is built with that unusual solidness, that it seems he intended to make a sacrifice to perpetuity, and to contend with the iron teeth of time. Howell's Vocal Trough.

SOLIDUNGULOUS. adj. [solidus and ungula, Latin.] Whole-hoofed.

It is set down by Aristotle and Pliny, that an horse and all solidungulous or whole-hoofed animals have no gall, which we find repugnant unto reason. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SOLIFIDIAN. n. f. [solus and fides, Latin.] One who supposes only faith, not works, necessary to justification.

It may be justly feared, that the title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church of God, at which so many myriads of solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond.

SOLILOQUY. n. f. [soliloquy, Fr. solus and loqueri, Lat.] A discourse made by one in solitude to himself.

The whole poem is a soliloquy: Solomon is the person that speaks: he is at once the hero and the author; but he tells us very often what others say to him. Prior.

He finds no respite from his anxious grief,

Then seeks from his soliloquy relief. Garth's Dispensary.

If I should own myself in love, you know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy. Spectator.

SOLIPED. n. f. [solus and pes, Lat.] An animal whose feet are not cloven.

Solipeds, or firm footed animals, as horses, asses, and mules, are in mighty number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SOLITAIRE. n. f. [solitaire, French.]

1. A recluse; a hermit.

Often have I been going to take possession of tranquillity, when your conversation has spoiled me for a solitaire. Pope.

2. An ornament for the neck.

SOLITARILY. adv. [from solitary.] In solitude; with loneliness; without company.

How should that submit solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it. Feiler.

Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage, which dwell solitarily in the wood. Mil. vii. 14.

SOLITARINESS. n. f. [from solitary.] Solitude; forbearance of company; habitual retirement.

There is no cause to blame the prince for sometimes hearing them: the blame-worthiness is, that to hear them he rather goes to solitariness than makes them come to company. Sidney.

You subject yourself to solitariness, the fly enemy that doth most separate a man from well doing. Sidney.

At home in whollome solitariness,

My piteous soul began the wretchedness

Of suitors at the court to mourn. Dennis.

SOLITARY. adj. [solitaire, French; solitarius, Latin.]

1. Living alone; not having company.

Those rare and solitary, these in flocks.

Satan explores his solitary flight. Milton.

Him fair Lavinia

Shall breed in groves to lead a solitary life. Dryden's Æn.

2. Retired; remote from company.

In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Shakespeare.

3. Gloomy; dismal.

Let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein. Job.

4. Single.

Nor did a solitary vengeance serve: the cutting off one head is not enough; the eldest son must be involved. K. Charles.

Relations alternately relieve each other, their mutual concurrences supporting their solitary instabilities. Bacon.

SOLITARY. n. f. [from the adjective.] One that lives alone; an hermit.

You describe so well your heremittical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave, with a spring, or any of the accommodations that best a solitary. Pope's Letter.

SOLITUDE. n. f. [solitudo, French; solitudo, Latin.]

1. Lonely life; state of being alone.

It had been hard to have put more truth and untruth together, in few words, than in that speech; whoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon.

But never find self-satisfying solitude. Milton's A. unjust.

3

SOL

What call'st thou solitude? Is not the earth

With various living creatures, and the air,

Replenish'd, and all these at thy command

To come, and play before thee? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such only can enjoy the country who are capable of thinking when they are there: then they are prepared for solitudes, and in that solitude is prepared for them. Dryden.

2. A lonely place; a desert.

SOLLAR. n. f. [solarium, low Latin.] A garret.

Some skilfuly drieth their hops on a kel,

And some on a sollar, oft turning them wel. Tusser.

SOLLO. n. f. [Italian.] A tune played by a single instrument.

SOLLOMON'S LEAF. n. f. A plant.

SOLLOMON'S SEAL. n. f. [polyonatum, Lat.] A plant.

SOLSTICE. n. f. [solstice, French; solstitium, Latin.]

1. The point beyond which the sun does not go; the tropical point; the point at which the day is longest in Summer, or shortest in Winter.

2. It is taken of itself commonly for the Summer solstice.

The sun, ascending unto the northern signs, tegeteth first a temperate heat in the air, which by his approach unto the solstice he intendeth, and by continuation increaseth the same even upon declination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Let the plowmen's prayer

Be for moist solstices, and Winters fair. Moy's Virgil.

SOLSTITIAL. adj. [solstitial, French; from solstice.]

1. Belonging to the solstice.

Observing the dog-days ten days before and after the equinoctial and solstitial points, by this observation alone, are exempted a hundred days. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Happening at the solstice.

From the North to call

Decrepid Winter; from the South to bring

solstitial Summer's heat. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fields labour'd with thirst; Aquarius had not shed

His wonted flowers, and Sirius parch'd with heat

solstitial the green herbs. Philips.

SOLUBLE. adj. [from solvo.] Possible to be cleared by reason or inquiry.

Intellective memory I call an act of the intellective faculty, because it is wrought by it, though I do not inquire how or where, because it is not soluble. Hale's Origin of Manind.

SOLUBLE. adj. [solubilis, Latin.] Capable of dissolution or separation of parts.

Sugar is a soluble element, being soluble in water and fusible in fire. Arbutnot.

SOLUBILITY. n. f. [from soluble.] Susceptiveness of separation of parts.

This cannot account for the indissoluble coherence of some bodies, and the fragility and solubility of others. Glauc. Scrf.

To SOLVE. v. a. [solvo, Latin.] To clear; to explain; to untie an intellectual knot.

He would solve high dispute

With conjugal caresses. Milton.

Do thou, my soul, the destin'd period wait,

When God shall solve the dark decrees of fate;

His now unequal dispensations clear,

And make all wise and beautiful appear. Tickell.

It is mere trifling to raise objections, merely for the sake of answering and solving them. Watts.

SOLVENCY. n. f. [from solvens.] Ability to pay.

SOLVENT. adj. [solvens, Latin.]

1. Having the power to cause dissolution.

When dissolved in water, it is not by the eye distinguishable from the solvent body, and appears as fluid. Boyle.

2. Able to pay debts contracted.

SOLUND-GOOSE. n. f. A fowl.

A solund-goose is in bigness and feather very like a tame goose, but his bill longer, and somewhat pointed; his wings also much longer, being two yards over. Grew.

A Scot, when from the gallow-tree let loose,

Drops into Styx, and turns a solund-goose. Cleveland.

SOLUTIO. n. f. [Solutio, French; solutio, Latin.]

1. Dissolution; breach; disjunction; separation.

In all bodies there is an appetite of union, and evitiation of solutio of continuity.

2. Matter dissolved; that which contains anything dissolved.

Aræteus, to procure sleep, recommends a solutio of opium in water to foment the forehead.

When salt of Tartar per deliquium, poured into the solutio of any metal, precipitates the metal, and makes it fall down to the bottom of the liquor in the form of mud, does not this argue that the acid particles are attracted more strongly by the salt of tartar than by the metal, and by the stronger attraction go from the metal to the salt of tartar? Newton's Opt.

3. Resolution of a doubt; removal of an intellectual difficulty.

Something yet of doubt remains,

Which only thy solutio can relieve. Milton's Parad. Lost.

They give the reins to wand'ring thoughts,

'Till by their own perplexities involv'd

They ravel more, still less resolv'd,

But never find self-satisfying solutio. Milton's A. unjust.

SOM

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear;

The man diffides in his own augury, Dryden.

And doubts.

This will instruct you to give a plainer solution of any difficulties that may attend the theme, and refute objections. Watts.

SOLUTIVE. adj. [from solvo, Latin.] Laxative; causing relaxation.

Though it would not be so absterfve, opening, and solutive as meat, yet it will be more lenitive in sharp diseases. Bacon.

SOMATOLOGY. n. f. [σώμα and λόγος.] The doctrine of bodies.

SOME. A termination of many adjectives, which denote quality or property of any thing. It is generally joined with a substantive: as game/some. [saam, Dutch.]

SOME. adj. [from, rum, Saxon; sums, Gothick; sum, Germ. sem, Danish; som, semme, Dutch.]

1. More or less, noting an indeterminate quantity.

We landed some hundred men, where we found some fresh water. Raleigh.

2. More or fewer, noting an indeterminate number.

Let me leave some of the folk that are with me. Gen. xxxiii.

First go with me some few of you, and see the place, and how it may be made convenient for you; and then find for your sick. Bacon.

3. Certain persons. Some is often used absolutely for some people; part.

Some to the shores do fly,

Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;

But running from, all to destruction hie.

Not in the neighbouring moon as some have dream'd. Milt.

Your edicts some reclaim from fins,

But most your life and blest example wins. Dryden.

4. Some

SOM

SOMETHING. n. f. [rum'sing, Saxon.]

1. Not nothing, though it appears not what; a thing or matter indeterminate.

When fierce Bavar
Did from afar the British chief behold,
Betwixt despair and rage, and hope and pain,
Something within his warring bosom roll'd.
The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small, in respect of that of the heart; but it is still something.

You'll say the whole world has something to do, something to talk of, something to wish for, and something to be employed about; but pray put all these somethings together, and what is the sum total but just nothing.

Here she beholds the chaos dark and deep,
Where nameless somethings in their causes sleep.

2. More or less.

Something yet of doubt remains.
Years following years steal something ev'ry day,
At least they steal us from ourselves away.

3. Part.

Something of it arises from our infant state.
Distance not great.

4. Distance not great.

I will acquaint you with the perfect spy o' th' time; for't must be done to-night, and something from the palace.

- SOMETHING. adv. In some degree.

The pain went away upon it; but he was something discouraged by a new pain falling some days after upon his elbow on the other side.

- SOMETIME. adv. [some and time.] Once; formerly.

What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form,
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometime march?

- SOMETIMES. adv. [some and times.]

Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France. Sh.
1. Not never; now and then; at one time or other.

I will render me more equal, sometime superior. Milton.
It is good that we sometimes be contradicted, and that we always bear it well; for perfect peace cannot be had in this world.

2. At one time, opposed to sometimes, or to another time.

The body passive is better wrought upon at sometimes than at others.

- SOMETIMES. adv. In some degree.

Sometimes the one, and sometimes the other, may be glanced upon in these scripture descriptions.

3. Part greater or less.

Concerning every of these, somewhat Christ hath commanded, which must be kept 'till the world's end: on the contrary side, in every of them somewhat there may be added, as the church judges it expedient.

4. Part greater or less.

Some what of his good sense will suffer in this transfusion, and much of the beauty of his thoughts will be lost.

- SOMETHING. adv. In some degree.

Holding of the breath doth help somewhat to cease the hic-cough.

- SOMETHING. adv. In some degree.

He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole; yet these imperfections hinder not our compassion.

- SOMETHING. adv. In some degree.

They are return'd, and somewhere live obscurely. Denham.
Compressing two primas hard together, that their sides, which by chance were a very little convex, might somewhere touch one another, I found the place in which they touched to become absolutely transparent, as if they had there been one continued piece of glass.

- SOMETHING. adv. In some degree.

Does something still, and somewhere yet remain,
Reward or punishment?

- SOMETHING. adv. In some degree.

Though under colour of the shepherds some while,
There crept in wolves full of fraud and guile,
That often devoured their own sheep,
And often the shepherd that did 'em keep.

SON

SOMNIFEROUS. adj. [somnifere, Fr. sonnifer, Latin.] Causing sleep; procuring sleep; soporiferous; dormitive.

I wish for some sonniferous potion, that might force me to sleep away the intermitted time, as it does with men in for-row.

SOMNIFICK. adj. [somnus and facio, Latin.] Causing sleep.

SOMNOLENCY. n. f. [somnolentia, Latin.] Sleepiness; inclination to sleep.

SON. n. f. [sunus, Gothick; suna, Saxon; son, German;
son, Swedish; sons, Dutch; syn, Slavonian.]

1. A male born of one or begotten by one; correlative to father or mother.

She had a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed.

Cast out this bondswoman and her son.
He compares the affection of the Divine Being to the indulgence of a wife father, who would have his sons exercised with labour and pain, that they may gather strength.

2. Descendant however distant: as, the sons of Adam.

I am the son of the wife, the son of ancient kings.

3. Compellation of an old to a young man, or of a confessor to his penitent.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling thrift.

4. Native of a country.

Britain then
Sees arts her savage sons controul.

5. The second person of the Trinity.

If thou be the son of God, come down.

6. Product of any thing.

Our imperfections prompt our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth.

Earth's tall sons, the cedar, oak, and pine,
Their parents undecaying strength declare.

7. In scripture, sons of pride, and sons of light, denoting some quality.

This new favorite
Of heav'n, this man of clay, son of despite.

SON-IN-LAW. n. f. One married to one's daughter.

If virtue no benighted beauty lack,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

A foreign son-in-law shall come from far,
Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name.

SONSHIP. n. f. [from son.] Filiation; the character of a son.

The apostle to the Hebrews makes afflictions not only incident but necessary to Christianity, the badge and cognizance of sonship.

SONATA. n. f. [Italian.] A tune.

He whistled a Scotch tune, and an Italian sonata.

Could Pedro, think you, make no trial
Of a sonata on his viol,

Unless he had the total gut.

SONG. n. f. [from ge-zungen, Saxon.]

1. Any thing modulated in the utterance.

Noise other than the sound of dance and song.

He first thinks that the song or dance.

2. A poem to be modulated by the voice; a ballad.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about his tomb they go!

3. A poem; lay; strain.

The bard that first adorn'd our native tongue,
Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song.

4. Poetry; poesy.

This subject for heroic song pleas'd me.

Names memorable long.

5. Notes of birds.

The lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning grey.

6. An old song. A trifle.

I do not intend to be thus put off with an old song.
A hopeful youth, newly advanced to great honour, was forced by a cobbler to resign all for an old song.

SONGISH. adj. [from song.] Containing songs; consisting of songs. A low word.

The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing.

SONSTER. n. f. [from song.] A finger. Used of human fingers, it is a word of slight contempt.

The pretty sonsters of the Spring with their various notes did seem to welcome him as he passed.

Some sonsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own.

Either sonster holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes.

SOO

SO'NGSTRESS. n. f. [from song.] A female finger.

Through the soft silence of the listening night,
The sober-suit'd songstress trills her lay.

SONNET. n. f. [sonnet, French; sonnetto, Italian.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language, and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close; both matter, form, and file;
The subject new: it walk'd the town a-while,
Numb'ring good intellects, now seldom por'd on:

Cries the itall-reader, Bless us, what a word on A title-page is this! and some in file
Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, fir, than Gordon, Colkitto, or Macdonnell, or Galasp?

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek,
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp:
Thy age like ours, foul of fir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,

When thou taught'st Cambridge and king Edward Greek.

2. A small poem.

Let us into the city presently,
To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in musick;
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn.

SONNETTE'ER. n. f. [sonnetier, French; from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.

Assist me, I me extemporal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetter.

He first thinks fit no sonnetter advance.

His censure farther than the song or dance.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetters in this art.

What wouldst thou this madrigal would be,
In some star'd hackney sonnetter or me?

But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines!

SONIFEROUS. adj. [sonus and fero, Latin.] Giving or bringing sound.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies.

SONORIFIC. adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.] Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorific quality, this would be unsatisfactory.

SONOROUS. adj. [sonorus, French; sonorus, Latin.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or insonorous.

All the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds;

At which the universal host up-lent
A shout that tore hell's concave.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression.

SONOROUSLY. adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONOROUSNESS. n. f. [from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best reasoning for sonorousness, he replied, that in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty.

2. Magnificence of sound.

SOON. adv. [sunus, Gothick; suna, Saxon; soon, Dutch.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Yet to their gen'ral's voice they soon obey'd.

You must obey me, soon or late;

Why should you vainly struggle with your fate?

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too late.

And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

Do this, that I may be reformed to you the sonner.

How is it that you are come to soon-to-day?

The earlier flayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sonner.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is toiled up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licentious or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preferred Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue.

SOO

5. SOON. adv. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,
With the too early thoughts of being king.

SOONLY. adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.

A maion meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and,
soonly approving of it, places it in his work.

SOOPBERRY. n. f. [spindus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a flower, which for the most part is compos'd of four leaves, expanding in form of a rose; from whole four-leaved empalement arises the pointal, which afterward becomes a spherical fruit, inclosing a nut of the same form.

SOOT. n. f. [soot, Saxon; soot, Ilhandick; soet, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning.

Of they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest distill'd, with'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again.

SOOTED. adj. [from soot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before.

SOOTERKIN. n. f. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to-bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a sooterkinn.

SOOTH. n. f. [sooth, Saxon.] Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
Th' youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the eldest sister first be wed.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth.

He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter;
I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill habit has the force of an ill fate.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distress'd.

SOOTH. adj. [sooth, Saxon.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains.

To SOOTH. v. a. [gepoethan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothings them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insurrection, sedition.

Can I sooth tyranny?

Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne?

By his fair daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind;
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name.

SOOTHER. n. f. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of soothers.

To SOOTHER. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.

A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her matters much gain by soothsaying.

SOOTHSAVER. n. f.

SONGSTRESS.

SOP

SOOTHSAY'ER. n. f. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Seance was Musidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ideo of March. Shakep.
He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon's Henry VII.

SOOTINESS. n. f. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

SOOTY. adj. [from soot.]

1. Breeding foot.

Metals to gold. Milton.

2. Confisting of foot; fuliginous.

There may be some chymical way so to defecate this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron;
Harpies and hydras and all monstrous forms. Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.

SOP. n. f. [prop. Saxon; sopa, Spanish; soppe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor to be eaten.

The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakepeare.
Draw, you rogue; for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you. Shakepeare.
Sops in wines, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon's Natural History.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard.
Which mix'd with powerful drugs, the cast before
His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryden.

Ill nature is not to be cured with a sop; but quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

To Cerberus they give a sop, Swift.

His tripping barking mouth to stop.

To SOP. v. a. To steep in liquor.

SOP. n. f. [See SOAP.]

SOPH. n. f. [from sophista, Latin.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sophis, and three pert templars came,
The fame their talents, and their tastes the fame;
Each prompt to query, answer and debate,
And limit with love of poetry and prate. Pope's Dunciad.

SOPH. n. f. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.

By this scimitar

That slew the sophi and a Persian prince. Shakepeare.
A fig for the sultan and sophi. Congreve.

SOPHISM. n. f. [from sophisma, Latin.] A fallacious argument; an ungrounded subtlety; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from sophista, Latin.] A professor of philosophy. The court of Cretus is said to have been much reformed by the sophists of Greece in the happy beginning of his reign. Tem.

SOPHIST. n. f. [from sophista, Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophist. Shakepeare's Hen. VI.
If a heathen philosopher bring arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophists can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk, nor live, as if there was no such thing. Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophists and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians. Rogers's Sermons.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist. This sense is antiquated.

Aldidimus the sophist had many arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excell'd premeditated speech. Hooker.

SOPHISTICAL. adj. [from sophisticus, Fr. from sophista.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical cozenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this fabulous world. Hall.
When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillingfleet.

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a more sophistical knot. Mare.

SOR

SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.] With fallacious subtlety.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.
To S. PHISTICATE. v. a. [from sophistiquer, Fr. from sophiste.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophistificate the understanding, they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth, where scarce any probable thew appeareth. Hooker.

Here's three of us are sophistificated. Shakepeare.
Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophistificated ones. Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophistificated nature and philosophy, were the Stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicit acts of man's will. Saunders's Sermons.

Yet the rich culleys may their boasting t, are;

They purchase but sophistificated ware:

'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,

Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.

The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, left it should tinge and sophistificate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Boyle.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophistificate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Glaucon.

So truth, when only one supply'd the state,

Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophistificate. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATOR. n. f. [from sophisticator, Fr. from sophistificate.]

Adulteration; not genuineness.
Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain. Quincy.

The drugs and simples sold in shops, generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle.

Befides easy submission to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasoners Uran.

SOPHISTICATOR. n. f. [from sophistificate.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

SOPHISTRY. n. f. [from sophist.] Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Sidney.

These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things, by their false principles and wretched sophistry; tho' an act be never so sinful, they will flip it of its guilt. South.

To SOPORATE. v. n. [from soporare, Latin.] To lay asleep.

SOPORIFEROUS. adj. [from sopor and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotick; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures deep sleeps. Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Gulliver's Travels.

SOPORIFEROUSNESS. n. f. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPORIFICK. adj. [from sopor and ficio.] Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Locke.

SOPPER. n. f. [from sop.] One that sleeps any thing in liquor.

SORBILE. adj. [from sorbus, Latin.] That may be drunk or sipped.

SORBITION. n. f. [from sorbitio, Latin.] The act of drinking or sipping.

SORBS. n. f. [from sorbus, Lat.] The berries of the forb or service-tree.

SORCERER. n. f. [from sorcerer, French; sorciararius, low Latin.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage,

As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,

Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,

Soul-killing witches that deform the body, Shakepeare.

And many such like libertines of sin.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such. Bacon's Natural History.

He saw a fable sorcerer arise,

All sudden gorgon's hiss and dragon's glare, Pope.

And ten horn'd fiends.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses; but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts's Logic.

SORCERESS. n. f. [Female of sorcerer.] A female magician; an enchantress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn. Shakepeare.

Divers witches and sorceresses have sed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky sorceress that sat

Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,

Ris'n, and with hideous outcry roth'd between. Milton.

How cunningly the sorceress displays

Her own transgressions, to upbraid me, mine. Milton.

SOROICIDE. n. f. [forer and cado.] The murder of a sister.
 SO'RAGE. n. f. The blades of green wheat or barley. DiA.
 SO'RANCE. n. f. [In fariery.] Any disease or sore in horses. DiA.

SO'RREL. n. f. [ruje, Saxon; foré, French.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of forrel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of forrel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SO'RILY. adv. [from forry.] Meanly; poorly; despicably; wretchedly; pitifully.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help though I sing forrily. Sidney.
 SO'RINESS. n. f. [from forry.] Meanness; wretchedness; pitableness; despicableness.

SO'RROW. n. f. [foré, Danish.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness; mourning. Sorrow is not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good.

Sorrow is uneasiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you;
 That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakespeare.
 A world of woe and forrow. Milton.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
 But having you, can show no forrow now. Dryden.

To SORROW. v. n. [saurgan, Gothic; forrgan, Sax.] To grieve; to be sad; to be dejected.

The miserable change, now at my end,
 Lament, nor forrow at. Shakespeare.
 Where-ever sorrow is relief would be,
 If you do forrow at my grief in love,

By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
 Were both extermin'd. Shakespeare.
 Now I rejoice, not that ye were made forry, but that ye forrowed to repentance. 2 Cor. vii. 9.

I neither fear to die nor desire to live; and having mattered all grief in myself, I desire no man to forrow for me. Hayward.
 Send them forth, though forrowing, yet in peace. Milton.

Sad the prince explores
 The neighbouring main, and forrowing treads the shores. Pope.
 SORROWED. adj. [from forrow.] Accompanied with sorrow. Out of use.

Now the publick body, which doth seldom Play the recanter, feeling in itself
 A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
 Of its own fall, refraining aid to Timon;
 And sends forth us to make their forrowed tender. Shakespeare.

SORROWFUL. adj. [forrow and full.]
 1. Sad for something past; mournful; grieving.
 Blessed are they which have been forrowful for all thy scourges; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. Tob. xiii. 14.

2. Deeply serious. Not in use.
 Hannah said, no, my lord, I am a woman of a forrowful spirit: I have poured out my soul before the Lord. 1 Sam. i.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.
 The things that my soul refused to touch are as my forrowful meat. Job. vi. 7.

SORRY. adj. [forry, Saxon.]
 1. Grieved for something past. It is generally used of slight or casual miscarriages or vexations, but sometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.

O, forget
 What we are forry for ourselves in thee. Timon of Athens.
 The king was forry; nevertheless for the oath's sake he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. Matth. xiv. 9.

I'm forry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure. Shak.
 We are forry for the satire interperfed in some of these pieces, upon a few people, from whom the highest provocations have been received. Swift.

2. [From saur, filth, Icelandic.] Vile; worthless; vexatious.
 A fat and forry rheum offends me: Shakespeare's Othello.

How now, why do you keep alone?
 Of forry fancies your companions making,
 Using those thoughts, which should, indeed, have died
 With them they think on. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble; and Bajazet's cage had been but a forry prison. Glanville.

Coarse complexions,
 And cheeks of forry grain will serve to ply
 'I he fampler, and to teize the housewife's wool. Milton.

How vain were all the ensigns of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a forry slave! L'Estr.

If this innocent had any relation to his Thebais, the poet might have found some forry excuse for detaining the reader. Dryden.

If such a slight and forry business as that could produce one organical body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. Bentley's Sermons.

SORT. n. f. [sorte, French.]
 1. A kind; a species.
 Disfigur'd more than spirit of happy sort. Milton.

A substantial and unaffected piety, not only gives a man a credit among the sober and virtuous, but even among the vicious sort of men. Tilghson.

These three sorts of poems should differ in their numbers, designs, and every thought. Walsh.
 Endeavouring to make the signification of specific names clear, they make their specific ideas of the sorts of substances of a few of those simple ideas found in them. Locke.

2. A manner; a form of being or acting.
 Flowers in such sort worn, can neither be smelt nor seen well by those that wear them. Hooker.

That I may laugh at her in equal sort
 As she doth laugh at me, and makes my pain her sort. Spenser's Sonnet.

Rheum and Shimshai wrote after this sort. Exra vi. 8.
 To Adam in what sort shall I appear? Milton.

3. A degree of any quality.
 I have written the more boldly unto you, in some sort, as putting you in mind. Rom. xv. 15.
 I shall not be wholly without praise, if in some sort I have copied his stile. Dryden.

4. A class, or order of persons.
 The one being a thing that belongeth generally unto all, the other, such as none but the wiser and more judicious sort can perform. Hooker.

I have bought
 Golden opinions from all sorts of people. Shakespeare.
 Hospitality to the better sort, and charity to the poor, two virtues that are never exercised so well as when they accompany each other. Athenian's Sermons.

5. A company; a knot of people.
 Mine eyes are full of tears: I cannot see;
 And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
 But they can see a sort of traitors here. Shakespeare.

6. Rank; condition above the vulgar.
 Is signior Montano returned from the wars?—I know none of that name; lady; there was none such in the army of any sort. Shakespeare's Much. adv. about Nothing.

7. [Sort, Fr. sorte, Latin.] A lot. Out of use.
 Make a lottry,
 And by decree, let blockish Ajax
 Draw the sort to fight with Hector. Shakespeare.

8. A pair; a set.
 The first sort by their own suggestion fell. Milton.

To SORT. v. a. [Sortiri, Lat. assortire, Italian.]
 1. To separate into distinct and proper classes.
 These they sorted into their several times and places; some to begin the service of God with, and some to end; some to be interlac'd between the divine readings of the law and prophets. Hooker.

I come to thee for charitable licence,
 To sort our nobles from our common men. Shakespeare.
 A piece of cloth made of white and black threads though the whole appear neither white nor black, but grey; yet each remains what it was before, if the threads were pulled asunder, and sorted each colour by itself. Boyle.

Shell-fish have been, by some of the ancients, compared and sorted with the insects. Bacon's Natural History.
 With this desire, the hath a native might
 To find out every truth, if she had time;
 Th' innumerable effects to sort aright,
 And by degrees from cause to cause to climb. Davies.

The number of simple ideas, that make the nominal essence of the lowest species, or first sorting of individuals, depends on the mind of man. Locke.

The rays which differ in refrangibility may be parted and sorted from one another, and that either by refraction, or by reflexion. Newton's Opticks.

But grant that actions best discover man,
 Take the most strong and sort them as you can;
 The few that glare, each character must mark:
 You balance not the many in the dark. Pope.

2. To reduce to order from a state of confusion.
 Let me not be light;
 For a light wife doth make a heavy husband;
 And never be Bassanio so from me;
 But God sort all! Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

3. To conjoin; to put together in distribution.
 For, when the sorts things present with things past,
 And thereby things to come doth oft foresee;
 When the doth doubt at first, and chafe at first,
 These acts her own, without her body be. Davies.

5. To have success.
 The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain, but they have not sot to the same purpose as in their native country. Abbot's Description of the World.

It was tried in a blown bladder, whereunto flesh and a flower were put, and it sot not; for dry bladders will not blow, and new bladders further putrefaction. Bacon.

6. To fall out. [from sot, a lot, or sortir, to issue, French.]
 And so far am I glad it did sot. Shakespeare.
 As this jangling I esteem a sot. Shakespeare.
 Princes cannot gather this fruit, except they raise some persons to be companions; which many times sot to inconvenience. Bacon.

SORTAL. adj. A word formed by Locke, but not yet received.
 As things are ranked under names, into sorts or species only as they agree to certain abstract ideas, the essence of each sort comes to be nothing but that idea which the sortal, if I may so call it from sot, as I do general from genus, name stands for. Locke.

SORTLESS. n. f. [from sot.] Suitableness; agreement.
 I have received
 New dated letters from Northumberland,
 Their cold intent, thus:
 Here doth he with his person, with such power
 As might hold sortance with his quality,
 The which he could not levy. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

SORTILEGE. n. f. [Sortilège, Fr. fortilegium, Latin.] The act or practice of drawing lots.
 SORTMENT. n. f. [from sot.]
 1. The act of sorting; distribution.
 2. A parcel sorted or distributed.

To So. v. n. [A cant word.] To sit lazily on a chair; to fall at once into a chair.
 The winter sky began to frown,
 Poor Stella must pack off to town;
 From wholesome exercise and air,
 To sot in an easy chair. Swift.

SOT. n. f. [sot, Saxon; sot, French; sot, Dutch.]
 1. A blockhead; a dull ignorant stupid fellow; a dolt.
 Of Gloster's treachery,
 And of the loyal service of his son,
 When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot;
 And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shakespeare.

This by his tongue being made his mistress' picture,
 And then a mind put in't, either our brags
 Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description
 Prov'd us unspeaking sots. Shakespeare.
 Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the sot, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short. South's Sermons.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.
 Every sign
 That calls the staring sots to nasty wine. Rescramm.
 A furly ill-bred lord,
 That chides and snaps her up at every word:
 A brutal sot; who while he holds his head,
 With drunken filth bedaubed the nuptial bed.
 With drunken filth bedaubed the nuptial bed. Granville.

To SOT. v. a. To stupefy; to besot.
 Fox on his loyalty!
 I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
 Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
 A drizzling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden's Span. Friar.

 SOTTISH. adj. [from sot.]
 1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.

All's but naught:
 Patience is sottish, and impatience does Become a dog that's mad. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sottish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain. Hayward.

He gain'd a king
 Ahaz his sottish conqueror. Milton.
 'Tis sottish to offer at things that cannot be brought about. L'Estrange.

How ignorant are sottish pretenders to astrology. Swift.
 2. Dull with intemperance.

SOTTISHLY. adv. [from sottish.] Stupidly; dully; senselessly.
 Northumberland sottishly mad with over great fortune, procured the King by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown. Hayward.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy, and superstition sottishly ignorant in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion. Glanville.

So sottishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious folly and deplorable madness in the world. Bentley.

SOTTISHNESS. n. f. [from sottish.] Dullness; stupidity; insensibility.

Few consider what a degree of sottishness and confirmed ignorance men may find themselves into. South's Sermons.
 No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South.

The first part of the text, the folly and sottishness of Atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity. Bentley's Sermons.

SOVEREIGN. adj. [souverain, French; sovrano, Spanish.]
 1. Supreme in power; having no superior.
 As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; so prayer teacheth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good. Hooker.

You, my sovereign lady,
 Causeless have laid disgraces on my head. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
 None of us who now thy grace implore,
 But held the rank of sovereign queen before,
 Till giddy chance, whose malice never bears
 That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
 Cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

Whether Elau, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birth right, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

2. Supremely efficacious.
 A memorial of their fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy. Hooker.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick; and to this preservative of no better report than a horse drench. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Love-wounded Protheus,
 My bosom, as a bed,
 Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,
 And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. Shakespeare.

A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. Bacon.

Like the scum starv'd men did draw
 From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
 Which were with any sovereign fatness blest. Donne.
 Be cool, my friend, and hear my mule dispense
 Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense. Dryden.

SOVEREIGN. n. f. Supreme lord.
 O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
 And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakespeare.

By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
 Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
 Ours our alliance other lands desire'd. Dryden.

SOVEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.] Supremely; in the highest degree.
 He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boyle.

SOVEREIGNTY. n. f. [souveraineté, French.] Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.
 Give me pardon,
 That I, your vassal, have employed and paid
 Your unknown sovereignty. Shakespeare.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shakespeare.
 To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the

- the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty.
 A mighty hunter thence he shall be still'd
 Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n.
 Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty.
 Nothing does so gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren. Govern. of the Tongue.
 Jove's own tree.
 That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
 Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
 High as his t'pmost boughs to heav'n ascend,
 So low his roots to hell's dominion tend.
 I well foresee, when'er thy suit I grant,
 That I my much lov'd sovereignty shall want,
 And her new beauty may thy heart invade.
 Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God.
 Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus.
 SOUL. n. f. [from soul, French.] A subterraneous drain.
 Yet could not such mines, without great pains, and charges, if at all, be wrought, the dells would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adds or souls to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.
 Another of like sort, was found in sinking a souls-pit at Haigh in Lancashire.
 SOUL. n. f. The preterite and participle pass. of soul.
 I am souled of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that souled me not.
 The works of the Lord are great, souled out of all them that have pleasure therein.
 SOUL. n. f. [Japh. Sax. soul, Dan. soul, Islandick; soul, Dutch.]
 1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.
 When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either.
 Fie, fie, unrepentant tongue! to call her bad,
 Whose sovereignty to oft thou hast prefer'd
 With twenty thousand souls-confirming oaths.
 Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine;
 But that were strange, since all things bad and good;
 Since God himself is her eternal food.
 He remembered them of the promises, seals and oaths, which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage;
 that these being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls,
 could not by any polittick act of state be dissolved.
 Eloquence the soul, long charms the sense.
 2. Vital principle.
 They say this town is full of cozenage,
 Drug-working forerers that change the mind;
 Soul-killing witches that deform the body;
 And many such like libertines of sin.
 Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
 To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
 That souls of animals infuse themselves
 Into the trunks of men.
 Thou fun, of this great world both eye and soul,
 Join voices all ye living souls! ye birds,
 That singing up to heav'n-gate ascend,
 Bear on your wings, and in your notes his praise.
 In common discourse and writing, we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles.
 3. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.
 He has the very soul of bounty,
 Charity the soul of all the rest.
 4. Interior power.
 There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
 Would men observingly distil it out.
 5. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.
 Three wenches where I stood, cry'd:
 "Alas, good soul!"
 'This is a poor mad soul; and she says up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you.
 The poor soul fat singing by a lycamore tree,
 Sing all a green willow:
 Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee.
 Unenlarged souls are disgorged with the wonders of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn.
 6. Human being.
 The moral is the case of every soul of us,
 Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense.
 Your change is such as does not need defence.
 It is a republick; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls.
 My state of health none care to learn;
 My life is here no soul's concern.

7. Active power.
 Earth, air and seas, through empty space would rowl,
 And heav'n would fly before the driving soul.
 8. Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.
 Intelligent being in general.
 Every soul in heav'n shall bend the knee.
 SOUL. n. f. [from soul, French.] Furnished with mind.
 Gripping, and full tenacious of thy hold,
 Would'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely souled,
 Should give the prizes they had gain'd before.
 SOULLESS. adj. [from soul, French.] Means; low; spiritless.
 Slave, soulless villain, dog, O rarely bale!
 SOULSHOT. n. f. [from soul and shot.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.
 In the Saxon times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called pecunia sepulchralis & symbolum anime, and a Saxon soul- shot.
 SOUND. adj. [Jumb, Saxon.]
 1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.
 I am fall'n out with my more headier wills
 To take the indispo'd and sickly fit
 For the sound man.
 He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.
 He hath received him safe and sound.
 We can preserve
 Unhurt our minds, and understanding sound.
 The king visits all around,
 Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
 Honours the princely chiefs.
 But Cypres, and the rest of sounder mind,
 The fatal present to the flames design'd,
 Or to the deep.
 When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical.
 2. Right; not erroneous.
 Whom although to know be life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our sounded knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our false eloquence concerning him is silence.
 Let my heart be sound in thy statutes, that I be not ashamed.
 The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion.
 3. Stout; strong; lusty.
 The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give sound strokes with their clubs, wherewith they fight, or else shoot strong shots with their bows.
 4. Valid; not failing.
 They reserved their titles, tenures, and dignities whole and sound to themselves.
 5. Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.
 New wak'd from sounded sleep,
 Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid.
 In balmy sweet.
 SOUND. adv. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.
 The messenger approaching to him spake,
 But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
 So sound he slept that nought might him awake.
 SOUND. n. f. [from sound, French.] A shallow sea, such as may be sounded.
 The sound of Denmark, where ships pay toll.
 Behold I come, sent from the Stygian sounds,
 As a dire vapour that had cleft the ground,
 T'ingender with the night, and blast the day.
 Him young Thooa bore, the bright increase
 Of Phorcys, dreading in the sounds and seas.
 SOUND. n. f. [from sound, Fr.] A probe, an instrument used by chi-rurgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.
 The patient being laid on a table, pass the sound till it meet with some resistance.
 To SOUND. v. a.
 1. To search with a plummet; to try depth.
 In this secret there is a gulf, which while we live we shall never sound.
 You are, Hastings, much too shallow.
 To sound the bottom of the after-times.
 2. To try; to examine.
 Has he never before sounded you in this business?
 Invites these lords, and those he meant to sound.
 I was in jest,
 And by that offer meant to sound your breast.
 I've sounded my Numidians, man by man.
 And find 'em ripe for a revolt.

- To SOUND. v. n. To try with the sounding line.
 The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country and sounded it near twenty fathoms.
 Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding-line, he reaches no bottom.
 SOUL. n. f. The cuttle-fish.
 SOUL. n. f. [from soul, French; soul, Latin.]
 1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.
 Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
 With horrid sounds, though having little sense,
 And thereby wanting due intelligence,
 Have marred the face of goodly poetry,
 And made a monster of their fantasy.
 Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights,
 And then the best of our delights;
 I'll charm the air to give a sound,
 While you perform your antick round.
 Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a sound; so a long pole struck upon gravel in the bottom of the water, maketh a sound.
 The wasteful sound of trumpets loud.
 Whence'er he spoke his voice was heard around,
 Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound.
 That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound; though, 'till it affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion.
 2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.
 He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill sound in mens ears.
 Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not sound that must be the principle.
 To SOUND. v. n.
 1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.
 From you sounded out the word of the Lord.
 trumpet once more to sound at general doom.
 That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
 And first taught speaking trumpets how to sound.
 Thither the silver sounding lyres
 Shall call the smiling loves and young desires.
 2. To exhibit by likeness of sound.
 Why do you start, and seem to fear
 Things that do sound so fair?
 They being told there was small hope of ease
 To be expected to their evils from hence,
 Were willing at the first to give an ear
 To anything that sounded liberty.
 This relation sounds rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth.
 To SOUND. v. a.
 1. To cause to make a noise; to play on.
 And many nymphs about them flocking round,
 And many tritons, which their horns did sound.
 Michael bid sound
 Th'archangel trumpet.
 Mithras lay; none so renown'd
 The warrior trumpet in the field to sound;
 With breathing brass to kindle fierce alarms,
 And rouse to dare their fate in honourable arms.
 2. To betoken or direct by a sound.
 Once Jove from Ida did both hosts survey,
 And when he pleas'd to thunder, part the fray;
 Here heav'n in vain that kind retreat should sound,
 The louder cannon had the thunder drown'd.
 3. To celebrate by sound.
 Sun, sound his praise.
 SOUNDBOARD. n. f. [from sound and board.] Board which propagates the sound in organs.
 Try it without any soundboard along, only harpwise at one end of the string.
 As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
 To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes.
 SOUNDRING. adj. [from sound.] Sonorous; having a magnificent sound.
 Obsolete words may then be revived, when more sounding or more significant than those in practice.
 SOUNDLY. adv. [from sound.]
 1. Healthily; heartily.
 2. Lustily; stoutly; strongly.
 When Duncan is asleep,
 Whereto the rather shall this hard day's journey
 Soundly invite him.
 They did play
 My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast
 With other hammers made me soundly fast.
 Who had so often in your aid
 So many ways been soundly paid;
 Came in at last for better ends.
 Have no concern.
 Provided Punch, for there's the jest,
 Be soundly maul'd, and plague the rest.

- Their nobility and gentry are one half ruined, banished, of converted: they all soundly feel the smart of the last Irish war.
 3. Truly; rightly.
 The wisest are always the readiest to acknowledge, that soundly to judge of a law is the weightiest thing which any man can take upon him.
 The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to our religion.
 4. Fast; closely.
 Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
 Unto that elfen knight he had him fly,
 Where he slept soundly, void of evil thought.
 When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly.
 SOUNDNESS. n. f. [from sound.]
 1. Health; heartiness.
 I would I had that corporal soundness now,
 As when thy father and myself in friendship
 First tried our soldiership.
 2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.
 In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later from the soundness of belief.
 Letly is misled in his politics; but he hath given proof of his soundness in religion.
 3. Strength; solidity.
 This presupposed, it may stand then very well with strength and soundness of reason, even thus to answer.
 SOUP. n. f. [from soupe, French.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.
 Spongy morels in strong ragousts are found,
 And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd.
 Let the cook daub the back of the footman's new livery, or when he is going up with a dish of soup, let her follow him softly with a ladle-full.
 SOUR. n. f. [from sour, Saxon; sour, Welsh.]
 1. Acid; austere; pungent on the palate with asstringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.
 All sour things, as vinegar, provoke appetite.
 Their drink is sour.
 But let the bounds of licences be fix'd,
 Not things of disagreeing natures mix'd,
 Not sweet with sour, nor birds with serpents join'd.
 2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish; morose; severe.
 He was a scholar,
 Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not.
 A man of pleasant and popular conversation, rather free than sour and reserved.
 Tiberius, otherwise a very fair man, would punctually perform this rite unto others, and expect the same.
 He said a sour thing to Laura the other day.
 Sullen and sour, with discontented mien
 Jocasta frown'd.
 3. Afflictive; painful.
 Let me embrace these sour adversities;
 For wife men say it is the wisest course.
 4. Expressing discontent.
 The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance.
 SOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.
 A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,
 To make it seem more dear and dainty.
 To SOUR. v. a.
 1. To make acid.
 His angelick nature had none of that carnal leaven which ferments to the souring of ours.
 Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man
 His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
 'Till knowledge misapp'ly'd, misunderstood,
 And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood.
 One passion, with a different turn,
 Makes wit inflame or anger burn:
 So the sun's heat, with diff'rent pow'rs,
 Ripens the grape, the liquor sours.
 2. To make harsh.
 Tufts of grass sour land.
 3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.
 Hail, great king!
 To sour your happiness, I must report
 The queen is dead.
 He brought envy, malice, and ambition into Paradise, which soured to him the sweetness of the place.
 4. To make discontented.
 Not my own disgrace
 Hath ever made me sour my patient cheek,
 Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.

SOU

Three crabbed mouths had four'd themselves to death,
 Ere I could make thee open thy white hand. Shakespeare.
TO SOUR. v. n.
 1. To become acid.
 Affes milk, when it sours in the stomach, and whey, turned four, will purge strongly. Arbuthnot on Diet.
 2. To grow peevish or crabbed.
 They keep out melancholy from the virtuous, and hinder the hatred of vice from souring into severity. Addison.
 If I turn my eyes from them, or seem displeased, they sour upon it. Spenser.
SOURCE. n. f. [source, French.]
 1. Spring; fountain; head.
 Kings that rule
 Behind the hidden sources of the Nile. Addison's Cato.
 2. Original; first cause.
 This second source of men, while yet but few,
 With some regard to what is just and right, Shall lead their lives. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 This is the true source and original of this mischief. South.
 Of himself is none;
 But that eternal Infinite, and One,
 Who never did begin, who ne'er can end,
 On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryden.
 3. First producer.
 Famous Greece,
 That source of art and cultivated thought,
 Which they to Rome, and Romans hither brought. Waller.
SOURISH. adj. [from sour.] Somewhat four.
 By distillation we obtain a sourish spirit, which will dissolve coral. Boyle.
SOURLY. adv. [from sour.]
 1. With acidity.
 2. With acrimony.
 The stern Athenian prince
 Then sourly smil'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
SOURNESS. n. f. [from sour.]
 1. Acidity; austereness of taste.
Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body, and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon's Natural History.
 I th' Spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
 But Summer doth, like age, the sourness wattle. Denham.
 He knew
 For fruit the grafted pear-tree to dispose,
 And came to plumb the sourness of the fleece. Dryd. Virgil.
 Of acid or four one has a notion from taste, sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Arbuthnot.
 Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end?
 2. Austerity; harshness of temper.
 Pelagius carped at the curious neatness of mens apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too harshly thereof. Hobbes.
 He was never thought to be of that superstitious sourness, which some men pretend to in religion. King Charles.
 Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature. Addison's Freeholder.
SOURSOR. n. f. [quadrantus, Latin.] Custard-apple.
 It grows in several parts of the Spanish West-Indies, where it is cultivated for its fruits. Milner.
SOUT. n. f. [sou, French.] A small denomination of money.
SOUSE. n. f. [saut, salt, Dutch.]
 1. Pickle made of salt.
 2. Any thing kept pickled in salt-pickle.
 And he that can rear up a pig in his house,
 Hath cheaper his bacon, and sweeter his souse. Tusser.
 All-faints, do lay for pork and souse.
 For sprats and springles for your house. Tusser.
TO SOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To parboil, and steep in pickle.
 Oyl, though it sink, they drop by drop impart;
 But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart. Pope.
 2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.
 They soused me into the Thames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies. Shakespeare.
 Who those were that run away,
 And yet gave out th' had won the day;
 Although the rabble soused them for, Shakespeare.
 O'er head and ears in mud and dirt.
 They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides. Addison's Guardian.
TO SOUSE. v. n. [Of this word I know not the original.] To fall as a bird on its prey.
 Thus on some flyer swan, or tim'rous hare,
 Jove's bird comes sousing down from upper air;
 Her crooked talons trusts the fearful prey,
 Then out of sight she soars. Dryden's Zen.
 Jove's bird will souse upon the tim'rous hare,
 And tender kids with his sharp talons tear. Dryden, Jun.
TO SOUSE. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

SOU

The gallant monarch is in arms,
 And like an eagle o'er his airy towers,
 To souse annoyance that comes near his nest. Shakespeare.
SOUSE. adv. With sudden violence. A low word.
SOUTERRAIN. n. f. [souterrain, French.] A grotto, or cavern in the ground. Not English.
 Delencies against extremities of heat, as shade, grottoes, or souterrains, are necessary preservatives of health. Arbuthnot.
SOUTH. n. f. [south, Saxon; sud, Dutch; sud, French.]
 1. The part where the sun is to us at noon.
 East and West have no certain points of heaven, but North and South are fixed; and seldom the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise. Bacon.
 2. The southern regions of the globe.
 The queen of the South. Bille.
 From the North to call
 Decrepid Winter, from the South to bring.
 Solstitial Summer's heat. Milton.
 3. The wind that blows from the South.
 All the contagion of the South light on you,
 You flames of Rome, you!
 The North-east spends its rage, and now
 Th' effusive South warms the wide air. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
SOUTH. adj. [from the noun.] Southern; meridional.
 One inch of delay more is a South sea off discovery. Shakespeare.
 How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth
 by the South wind. Job xxxvii. 17.
 Mean while the South wind rose, and with black wings Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove. Milton.
SOUTH. adv.
 1. Towards the South.
 His regiment lies half a mile
South from the mighty power of the king. Shak. R. III.
 2. From the South.
 Such fruits as you appoint for long keeping, gather in a fair and dry day, and when the wind bloweth not South.
SOUTHERN. adj. [from the noun.] Going towards the South.
 I will conduct thee on thy way.
 When next the southern sun inflames the day,
 Not far from hence, if I observ'd aright
 The southern of the stars and polar lights.
 Sicilia lies. Dryden's Zen.
SOUTHERAST. n. f. [South and East.] The point between the East and South; the point of Winter sunrise.
 The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the South, or Southeast sun, doth hasten their ripening; and the Southeast is found better than the Southwest. Bacon.
 The three seas of Italy, the Inferiour towards the Southeast, the Ionian towards the South, and the Adriatick on the Northeast side, were commanded by three different nations. Arbuthnot.
SOUTHERLY. adj. [from South.]
 1. Belonging to any of the points denominated from the South; not absolutely southern.
 2. Lying towards the South.
 Unto such as live under the Pole that is only north which is above them, that is only southerly which is below them. Brown.
 Two other country bills give us a view of the most easterly, westerly, and southerly parts of England. Grant.
 3. Coming from about the South.
 I am but mad north, northwest: when the wind is southerly,
 I know a hawk from a handfaw. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
SOUTHERN. adj. [from the noun.] From South.
 1. Belonging to the South; meridional.
 Why mourn I not for thee,
 And with the southern clouds contend in tears? Shak. Hamlet.
 2. Lying towards the South.
 3. Coming from the South.
 Mens bodies are heavier when southern winds blow than when northern. Bacon's Natural History.
 Frowning Ausfer seeks the southern sphere,
 And rots with endless rain th' unwholesome year. Dryden.
SOUTHERNWOOD. n. f. [sudernpubu, Saxon; abstrannus, Lat.]
 This plant agrees in most parts with the wormwood, from which it is not easy to separate it. Milner.
SOUTHWEST. adj. [from South.] Farthest toward the South.
 Next Chemos, th' obscene dread of Moab's sons,
 From Aroar to Nebo, and the wild
 Of southwest Abarim. Milton.
SOUTHSAY. n. f. [Properly southsay.] Prediction.
 All those were idle thoughts and fantasies,
 Devices, dreams, opinions unfound,
 Shews, visions, southsays, and prophecies.
 And all that feigned is, as leadings, tales, and lies. Ed. 2.
TO SOUTHSAY. v. n. [See SOUTHSAY.] To predict.
 Young men, hovering between hope and fear, might easily be carried into the superstition of southsaying by names. Camden.
SOUTHSAYER. n. f. [Properly southsayer.] See SOUTHSAY.
 A predictor.
SOUTHWARD. adv. [from South.] Towards the South.
 Countries are more fruitful to the southward than in the northern parts. Raleigh's History of the World.
 A prisoner in a room twenty foot square, is at liberty to walk twenty foot southward, but not northward. Locke.

SOUTHWEST. n. f. [South and West.] Point between the South and West; Winter sun-set.
 Phenice is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the Southwest. Acts xxvii. 12.
 The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the South,
 or Southeast sun, doth hasten their coming on and ripening;
 and the Southeast is found to be better than the Southwest, tho'
 the Southwest be the hotter coal. Bacon's Natural History.
SOUVENANCE. n. f. [French.] Remembrance; memory.
 A French word which with many more, is now happily disused.
 If thou wilt renounce thy miscreance,
 Life will I grant thee for thy valiance,
 And all thy wrongs will wipe out of my souvenance. Spenser.
 Gave wondrous great countenance to the knight,
 That of his way he had no souvenance,
 Nor care of vowl'd revenge.
SOW. n. f. [sugon, Saxon; sew, sauve, Dutch.]
 1. A female pig; the female of a boar.
 Boars have great fangs, sows much less. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 A sow beneath an oak shall lye along,
 And white herself, and white her thirty young. Dryden.
 For which they corn and late them worse
 Than dogs and cats do sow gelders. Hudibras.
 The sow gelder's horn has something musical in it, but this is seldom heard. Addison's Spectator.
 2. Perhaps from sow might come swine, grana, Saxon.
 And was't thou fain
 To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn.
 In short and musty straw? Shakespeare's King Lear.
 3. An oblong mass of lead.
 4. An insect; a millepede. Ainsworth.
SOWBREAD. n. f. [cyclamen, Latin.] A plant.
 It hath a thick round fleshy root: the flowers arise singly upon pedicels from the root, which consist of one leaf, divided into five or six segments, which are reflexed almost to the bottom, where they are divided: the point of the flower becomes a round membranaceous fruit, which contains roundish seeds. Milner.
TO SOW. v. n. [saiu, Gothick; sapan, Saxon; sagen, Dutch.] To scatter seed in order to a harvest.
 The one belongeth unto them that seek, the other unto them that have found happiness: they that pray do but yet sow, they that give thanks declare they have reaped. Hobbes.
 The vintage shall reach unto the sowing time. Leu. xxvi. 5.
 They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. Psal. cxlvi. 5.
 He that soweth to his flesh, shall reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall reap life everlasting. Gal. vi. 8.
 Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy. Hag.
TO SOW. v. a. part. pass. sown.
 1. To scatter in the ground in order to grow; to propagate by seed.
 Like was not to be found,
 Save in that soil where all good things did grow,
 And freely sprung out of the fruitful ground
 As incorrupted nature did them sow. Fairy Queen.
 From Ireland come I with my strength,
 And reap the harvest which that racial sow'd. Shakespeare's H. VI.
 I sow my law in you, and it shall bring fruit in you. 2 Elfr.
 Many plants, which grow in the hotter countries, being set in the colder, will, being sown of seeds late in the Spring, come up and abide most part of the Summer. Bacon.
 The intellectual faculty is a goodly field, capable of great improvement; and it is the worst husbandry in the world to sow it with trifles or impertinencies. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 When to turn
 The fruitful soil, and when to sow the corn.
 Things, Metacras. Dryden's Georg.
 The proud mother views her precious brood,
 And happier branches, which she never sow'd. Dryden.
 2. To spread; to propagate.
 Forwardness is in his heart; he deviseth mischief continually, he soweth discord. Prov. vi. 14.
 To sow a jangling noise of words unknown. Milton.
 Since then they stand secur'd by being join'd:
 It were worthy a king's head, to sow division,
 And seeds of jealousy, to loose those bonds.
 Born to afflict my Marcia's family,
 And sow dissension in the hearts of brothers. Addison's Cato.
 3. To impregnate or stock with seed.
 He shall give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal. Is. xxx. 23.
 4. To besprinkle.
 He sow'd with stars the heav'n thick as a field. Milton.
 Morn new sow'd the earth with orient pearl. Milton.
TO SOW. v. a. For sow.
 Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together sow'd,
 And glided on, may cover round. Milton.
TO SOW. v. a. To throw into the water. See Souse.
 He sowed me up to the middle in the pond. L'Estrange.

SPA

SPARE. n. f. [from sower.]
 1. He that sprinkles the seed.
 A sower went forth to sow. Mat. xiii. 3.
 It is thrown round, as grain by a skillful sower. Derham.
 2. A scatterer.
 Terming Paul and his doctrine a sower of words, a very babbler or trifler. Hakewill on Providence.
 3. A breeder; a promoter.
 They are sowers of suits, which make the court swell, and the country pine. Bacon.
SO'WINS. n. f. Flummery, somewhat four'd and made of oatmeal.
 These sowins, that is, flummery, being blended together, produce good yeast. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 See where Norah with the sowins comes. Swift.
TO SOW. v. a. [from sow, as hogs are pulled by dogs, Skinner; from sals, a strap, a rein, Kennet.] To pull by the ears.
 He'll go and sow the porter of Rome-gates by th' ears. Shak.
SOWNS. The participle of sow. It is barbarously used by Swift for sowed.
 An hundred and fifty of their beds, sown together, made up the breadth and length. Gulliver.
SPATHISTLE. n. f. A weed.
Spathistles though coney eat, yet sheep and cattle will not touch; the milk of which rubbed on warts weareth them away, which sheweth it is corrosive. Bacon.
SPAAD. n. f. A kind of mineral.
 English tale, of which the coarser sort is called plaister or parget; the finer, spaad, earth-flax, or flamanader's hair. Woodward's Met. Foss.
SPACE. n. f. [spatium, Latin.]
 1. Room; local extension.
 Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points. Locke.
 Oh, undistinguish'd space of woman's wit!
 A plot upon her virtuous husband's life,
 And the exchange my brother. Shak. King Lear.
 This which yields or fills all space. Milton.
 Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.
Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be assigned to vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.
 2. Any quantity of place.
 I would not be the villain that thou think'st
 For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
 And the rich East to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods about ten miles space to Walpo. Knollys.
 In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled space would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.
 Measuring first with careful eyes
 The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.
 3. Quantity of time.
 Nine times the space that measures day and night
 To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
 Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton.
 In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight. Wilkins's Math. Mag.
 God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay 'till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson's Sermons.
 The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison's Freeholder.
 4. A small time; a while.
 Sit for me ye fight, to me this grace
 Both yield, to slay your deadly strife a space. Fairy Queen.
 Compassion quell'd
 His best of man, and gave him up to tears
 A space, 'till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.
SPACIOUS. adj. [spacius, Fr. spatiosus, Latin.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.
 The former buildings, which were but mean, contented them not: spacious and ample churches they erected throughout every city. Hobbes.
 Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty;
 And yet seem cold. Shakespeare.
 Metab with spacious beauty fills the fight,
 But too much awe chafes'd the bold delight.
 Like an English gen'l will I die,
 And all the ocean make my spacious grave:
 Women and cowards on the land may lie;
 The sea's a tomb that's proper for the brave. Dryden.
SPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from spacious.] Roominess; wide extension.

SPA

- SPADDER. n. f. [Diminutive of spade.] A little spade.
Others destroy moles with a spadde, waiting in the mornings and evenings for them. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- SPADE. n. f. [spas, Saxon; spade, Islandick and Dutch.]
1. The instrument of digging.
Take the air of the earth new turned up, by digging with the spade, or standing by him that diggeth. Bacon.
Many learned men affirm, that some isthmes have been eat through by the sea, and others cut by the spade. Brown.
His next advance was to the soldier's trade,
Where if he did not nimble ply the spade,
His furlly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.
Here nature never diff'rence made Between the sceptre and the spade. Swift.
2. A deer three years old. Answorth.
SPADICEOUS. adj. [spadicus, Latin.]
Of those five Scaliger beheld, though one was spadiceous, or of a light red, and two inclining to red, yet was there not any of this complexion among them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SPADILLE. n. f. [spadille, or spadille, French.] The ace of spades at ombre.
- SPAGYRICK. adj. [spagyricus, Lat. A word coined by Paracelsus from spas, a searcher, Teutonic.] Chymical.
- SPAGYRIST. n. f. A chymist.
This change is so unexampled, that though among the more curious spagyrist it be very well known, yet many naturalists cannot easily believe it. Boyle.
- SPAKE. The old preterite of spake.
So spake the archangel Michael, then paus'd. Milton.
- SPALL. n. f. [spaille, French.] Shoulder. Out of use.

- SPAN. n. f. [span, ponne, Saxon; spanna, Ital. span, Dutch.]
1. The space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger extended.
A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the statute; a span, one eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a forefinger's breadth one ninety-sixth. Haller on Time.
Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his infinite?
And buckle in a waste most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
Sum how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare.
When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar. Brown.
2. Any short duration.
You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
The virgin's part, the mother and the wife,
So well she acted in this span of life. Waller.
Then conscience, unrestrain'd by fears, began
To stretch her limits, and extend the span. Dryden.
Life's but a span, I'll ev'ry inch enjoy. Parghuar.
- TO SPAN. v. a.
1. To measure by the hand extended.
Oft on the well-known spot I fix my eyes,
And span the distance that between us lies. Tickell.
2. To measure.
My surveyor is false; the o'er great cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spann'd already. Shakespeare.
This foul doth span the world, and hang content
From either pole unto the centre;
Where in each room of the well-furnish'd tent
He lies warm, and without adventure.
Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song
First taught our English musick how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, counting short and long. Milton.
- SPAN. The preterite of spin. See SPIN.
Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets spans, Dryden's Nymphid.
So sharp were their encounters.
- SPAN-COUNTER. n. f. [from span, counter and fartling.] A span-fartling.
play at which money is thrown within a span of mark.
Tell the king, that for his father's sake, Henry V. in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Boys shall not play
At span-counter or blowpoint, but shall pay Toll to some courtier. Donne.

SPA

- His chief solace is to steal down, and play at span-fartling with the page. Swift.
- SPANG. n. f. [spange, Dutch.] This word seems to have signified a cluster of shining bodies.
The colours that flew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and ouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. Bacon.
- SPANGLE. n. f. [spange, German, a buckle, a locket; whence ober spangen, ear-ring.]
1. A small plate or bols of shining metal.
2. Any thing sparkling and shining.
As hoary frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy branches of an oak half dead. Fairy Queen.
Thus in a starry night fond children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.
The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence: vulgar spectators see them but as a confused huddle of petty illuminants. Granch.
That now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,
A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.
- TO SPANGLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.
They never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled starlight sheen. Shakespeare.
What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face. Shakespeare.
Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,
That th' eyes of busy fools may be stopt there. Donne.
Four faces each
Had, like a double Janus; all their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those Of Argus. Milton's Par. Lost.
- Then appear'd
Spangling the hemisphere, then first adorn'd
With the bright luminaries, that set and rose. Milton.
The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spang'd heav'n, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim. Aldison's Spectator.
- SPANIEL. n. f. [spanielus, Latin; spagneu, French.]
1. A dog used for sports in the field, remarkable for sagacity and obedience.
Divers days I followed his steps 'till I found him, having newly met with an excellent spaniel belonging to his dead companion. Sidney.
There are arts to reclaim the wildest men, as there are to make spaniels fetch and carry: chide 'em often, and feed 'em seldom. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
2. A low, mean, sneaking fellow; a courtier; a dedicator; a pensioner; a dependant; a placeman.
I mean sweet words,
Low crooked curties, and base spaniel fawning. Shakespeare.
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you beat me I will fawn on you. Shakespeare.
- TO SPANIEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fawn on; to play the spaniel.
The hearts
That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave Their wishes, do discandy and melt their sweets
On blossoming Cæsar. Shakespeare.
- SPANISH Broom. n. f. [genista juncea, Lat.] A plant so called, as being a native of Spain: it hath pliant branches, leaves placed alternately, flowers of the pea-bloom kind, succeeded by smooth pods, containing several kidney-shaped seeds in each. Miller.
- SPANISH Nut. n. f. [sissyrinchium, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a flower resembling the iris, from whence it differs in having a double root, one lying over another, after the same manner as those of crocus and gladiolus. Miller.
- SPANKER. n. f. A small coin.
Your cure too costs you but a spanker. Denham.
- SPANNER. n. f. The lock of a fufce or carabine.
My prince's court is now full of nothing but buff-coats, spanners, and musket-rests. Heuch.
- SPAR. n. f.
1. Marcalite.
Spar is a mixed body, consisting of crystal incorporated sometimes with lac luna, and sometimes with other mineral, stony, earthy, or metallic matter. Woodward.
Some stones, as spar of lead, dissolved in proper menstrua, become salts. Newton's Opt.
2. [Sparre, Dutch.] A small beam; the bar of a gate.
To SPAR. v. n. To fight with prelude strokes.
TO SPAR. v. a. [spanpan, Saxon; spieren, German.] To shut; to close; to bar.
And if he chance come when I am abroad,
Sparre the yate fast for fear of fraud;
Ne for all his worst, nor for his best, Sjensler's Postoral.
Six gates i' th' city with maffly staples,
And correlative and fulfilling bolts,
Spar up the fons of Troy. Shakespeare.

- TO SPARE. v. a. [spanpan, Saxon; spieren, Dutch; spanzen, French.]
1. To use frugally; not to waste; not to consume.
Thou thy father's thunder diest not sparre. Milton.
2. To have unemployed; to save from any particular use.
All the time he could sparre from the necessary cares of his weighty charge he bestowed on prayer, and serving of God; he oftentimes spent the night alone in church-praying, his head-piece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Keble.
He had no bread to sparre. Locke.
Only the foolish virgins entertained this foolish conceit, that there might be an overplus of grace sufficient to supply their want; but the wife knew not of any that they had to sparre, but supposed all that they had little enough. Tristram.
Let a pamphlet come in a proper juncture, and every one who can sparre a shilling shall be a subscriber. Swift.
3. To do without; to lose willingly.
I could have better spar'd a better man. Shak. Hen. IV.
For his mind, I do not care,
That's a toy that I could sparre;
Let his title be but great,
His clothes rich, and band sit neat.
Sense of pleasure we may well
Sparre out of life perhaps, and not repine;
But pain is perfect misery. Milton.
Now the might sparre the ocean, and oppose
Your conduct to the fiercest of her foes. Waller.
The fair blessing we vouchsafe to lend;
Nor can we sparre you long, tho' often we may lend. Dryd.
4. To omit; to forbear.
We might have spar'd our coming. Milton.
Be pleas'd your politicks to sparre;
I'm old enough, and can myself take care. Dryden.
5. To use tenderly; to forbear; to treat with pity; not to afflict; not to destroy; to use with mercy.
Spare us, good Lord. Common Prayer.
Who will let the discipline of wisdom over mine heart,
That they sparre me not for my ignorances? Eccles. xxxii. 2.
Doth not each look a flash of lightning feel?
Which sparre the body's throat, but melts the steel. Clavel.
Dim sadnets did not sparre
Celestial viages. Milton.
Less pleasure take brave minds in battles won
Than in restoring such as are undone:
Tygers have courage, and the rugged bear;
But man alone can whom he conquers sparre. Waller.
Spare me one hour! O sparre me but a moment. Irene.
6. To grant; to allow; to indulge.
Set me in the remotest place,
That Neptune's frozen arms embrace;
Where angry Jove did never sparre
One breath of kind and temperate air. Reformmon.
7. To forbear to inflict or impose.
Spare my remembrance; 'twas a guilty day;
And still the blush hangs here. Dryd. All for Love.
O sparre this great, this good, this aged king,
And sparre your foul the crime! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Spare my fight the pain
Of seeing what a world of tears it costs you. Dryden.
- TO SPARE. v. n.
1. To live frugally; to be parcimonious; to be not liberal.
H' has wherewithal: in him
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine. Shakespeare.
Those wants, which they rather feared than felt, would well enough be overcome by sparing and patience. Kneller.
Our labours late and early every morning,
Midst Winter frosts, then clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils.
God has not been to sparing to men to make them barely two-legged creatures, and left it to Aristotle to make them rational. Locke.
When they discover the passionate desire of fame in the ambitious man, they become sparing and saving in their commendations; they envy him the satisfaction of an applause. Addis.
Now a recruit to keep and sparre,
The next a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.
No statue in his favour lays
How free, or frugal I shall pass my days;
Who at some times spend, at others sparre,
Divided between carelessness and care. Pope.
2. To forbear; to be scrupulous.
His soldiers sparre'd not to say that they should be unkindly dealt with, if they were defrauded of the spoil. Kneller.
In these relations, although he be more sparing, his predecessors were very numerous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To pluck and eat my fill I spar'd not. Milton.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.
- SPARE. adj.
1. Scanty; not abundant; parcimonious.
He was sparre, but direct of speech; better conceiving than delivering; equally stout and kind. Carew's Surv. of Cornwall.
Men ought to beware, that they use not exercise and a sparre diet both. Bacon's Natural History.
Join with thee calm peace and quiet;
Spare fast, that oft with gods doth diet.
The matters of the world were bred up with sparre diet;
and the young gentlemen of Rome felt no want of strength, because they ate but once a day. Locke.
2. Superfluous; unwanted.
If that no sparre cloths he had to give,
His own coat he would cut, and it distribute glad. F. 2.
As any of our clock waxed well, he might be removed; for which purpose there were set forth ten sparre chambers. Bacon.
Learning seems more adapted to the female world than to the male, because they have more sparre time upon their hands, and lead a more sedentary life. Addison's Spectator.
In my sparre hours you've had your part;
Even now my servile hand your sovereign will obeys. Norr.
3. Lean; wanting flesh; macilent.
O give me your sparre men, and spare me the great ones. Sh.
If my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid.
So soon as that sparre Cassius. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
His village drawn he left to sharp and sparre.
His arms cling to his ribs. Milton's Parod. Lost.
- SPARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Parcimony; frugal use; husbandry. Not in use.
Our victuals failed us, though we had made good sparre of them. Bacon.
- SPARRER. n. f. [from sparre.] One who avoids expense.
By nature far from profusion, and yet a greater sparer than a faver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his fears, guardians, and his feelings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but look his leachequer. Watson.
- SPARRING. n. f. [sparre and spar.] Some part cut off from the ribs; as a sparre of pork.
- SPARGATION. n. f. [sparge, Lat.] The act of sprinkling.
- SPARKING. adj. [from sparre.]
1. Scarce; little.
Of this there is with you sparing memory or none; but we have large knowledge thereof. Bacon.
2. Scanty; not plentiful.
If much exercise, then use a plentiful diet; and if sparing diet, then little exercise. Bacon.
Good air, solitary groves, and sparing diet, sufficient to make you fancy yourself one of the fathers of the desert. Pope.
3. Parcimonious; not liberal.
Virgil being so very sparing of his words, and leaving so much to be imagined by the reader, can never be translated as he ought in any modern tongue. Dryden.
Though sparing of his grace, to mischief bent,
He seldom does a good with good intent. Dryden.
- SPARINGLY. adv. [from sparing.]
1. Not abundantly.
Give us leave freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly shew you far off
The dauphin's meaning? Shakespeare. Henry V.
The borders whereon you plant fruit-trees should be large, and set with fine flowers; but thin and sparingly, lest they deceive the trees. Bacon's Essays.
2. Frugally; parcimoniously; not lavishly.
Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon's Essays.
High titles of honour were in the king's minority sparingly granted, because dignity then waited on desert. Hayward.
Commend but sparingly whom thou do'st love;
But less condemn whom thou do'st not approve. Denham.
The morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, is more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.
3. With abstinence.
Christians are obliged to taste even the innocent pleasures of life but sparingly. Atterbury.
4. Not with great frequency.
Our sacraments, which had been frequented with so much zeal, were approached more sparingly. Atterbury's Sermons.
5. Cautiously; tenderly.
SPARK. n. f. [sporca, Saxon; spark, Dutch.]
1. A small particle of fire, or kindled matter.
If any marvel how a thing, in itself so weak, could import any great danger, they must consider not so much how small the spark is that fieth up, as how apt things about it are to take fire. Locke.
I am about to weep; but thinking that
We are a queen, my drops of tears I'll turn
To sparks of fire. Shakespeare.

SPA

- I was not forgetful of the sparks which some mens dissenters formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. K. Charles.
- In this deep quiet, from what source unknown,
Those seeds of fire that fatal birth disclose;
And first, few catt'ring sparks about were blown,
Big with the flames that to our ruin rose. Dryden.
- Oh, may some spark of your celestial fire
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.
2. Any thing shining.
We have, here and there, a little clear light, some sparks of bright knowledge. Locke.
3. Any thing vivid or active.
If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell, and say, I sent thee thither. Shaksp.
4. A lively, showy, splendid, gay man. It is commonly used contempt.
How many buffing sparks have we seen, that in the same day have been both the idols and the scorn of the same slaves? L'Estrange.
- A spark like thee, of the mankilling trade Fell sick. Dryden.
- As for the disputes of sharpeners, we don't read of any provisions made for the honours of such sparks. Collier.
- The finest sparks, and cleanest beaux Drip from the shoulders to the toes. Prior.
- I who have been the poet's spark to day,
Will now become the champion of his play. Granville.
- Unlucky as Fungoso in the play,
These sparks with awkward vanity display
What the fine gentlemen wore yesterday. Pope.
- TO SPARK, v. n. [from the noun.] To emit particles of fire; to sparkle. Not in use.
- Fair is my love,
When the rose in her cheek appears,
Or in her eyes the fire of love doth spark. Spenser.
- SPARKFUL, adj. [from spark and full.] Lively; brisk; airy.
Hitherto will our sparkful youth laugh at their great grandfather's English, who had more care to do well than to speak minion-like. Camden's Remains.
- SPARKISH, adj. [from spark.]
1. Airy; gay. A low word.
Is anything more sparkish and better humour'd than Venus's accosting her son in the delarts of Libya? Walsh.
2. Showy; well dressed; fine.
A daw, to be sparkish, trick'd himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.
- SPARKLE, n. f. [from spark.]
1. A spark; a small particle of fire.
He with repeated strokes
Of clashing flints, their hidden fires provokes;
Short flame succeeds, a bed of wither'd leaves
The dying sparkles in their fall receives;
Caught, into life, in fiery fumes they rise,
And, fed with stronger food, invade the skies. Dryden.
2. Any luminous particle.
To detract from the dignity thereof, were to injure ev'n God himself, who being that light which none can approach unto, hath sent out these lights wherof we are capable, even as so many sparkles resembling the bright fountain from which they rise. Hooker.
- When reason's lamp, which, like the sun in sky,
Throughout man's little world her beams did spread,
Is now become a sparkle which doth lie
Under the ashes, half extinct and dead.
Ah then! thy once lov'd Eloisa see!
It will be then no crime to gaze on me,
See from my cheek the transient roses die,
See the last sparkle languish in my eye. Pope.
- TO SPARKLE, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To emit sparks.
2. To issue in sparks.
The bold design
Pleas'd highly those infernal states, and joy
Sparkled in all their eyes. Milton.
3. To shine; to glitter.
A hair seen in a microscope loses its former colour, and is in a great measure pellucid, with a mixture of some bright sparkling colours, such as appear from the refraction of diamonds. Locke.
- Politulus is a fine young gentleman, who sparkles in all the shining things of dress and equipage. Watts.
- SPARKLINGLY, adv. [from sparkling.] With vivid and twinkling lustre.
Diamonds sometimes would look more sparklingly than they were wont, and sometimes far more dull than ordinary. Boyle.
- SPARKLINGNESS, n. f. [from sparkling.] Vivid and twinkling lustre.
I have observed a manifestly greater clearness and sparklingness at some times than at others, though I could not refer it to the superficial clearness or foulness of the stone. Boyle.
- SPARROW, n. f. [from sparra, Saxon.] A small bird.

SPA

- Dismay'd not this spare of the lion. Shaksp.
- Macbeth and Banquo? Yes, Shaksp.
- As sparrows, eagles; or the hare; the lion. Shaksp.
- There is great probability that a thousand sparrows will fly away at the sight of a hawk among them. Watts.
- SPARROWHAWK, or sparhawk, n. f. [from sparra, Saxon.] The female of the musket hawk. Hammer.
- SPARROWGRASS, n. f. [Corrupted from asparagus.] Your infant peats to sparrowgrass prefer,
Which to the supper you may best defer. King.
- SPARRY, adj. [from spar.] Consisting of spar.
In which manner spar is usually found herein, and other minerals; or such as are of some observable figure; of which sort are the sparry strise, or icicles called stalactites. Woodward.
- SPASM, n. f. [from spasma, Fr. spasme.] Convulsion; violent and involuntary contraction of any part.
All the maladies
Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
Of heart sick agony. Milton.
- Wounds are subject to pain, inflammation, spasm, Weyman.
- Carminative things dilute and relax; because wind occasions a spasm or convulsion in some part. Arbutnot.

And when he had spat on the ground, he anointed his eyes. Gospel.
- SPAT, n. f. The young shell-fish.
A reticulated film found upon sea-shells, and usually supposed to be the remains of the vesicles of the spat of some sort of shell-fish. Woodward on Fossils.
- TO SPATULATE, v. n. [from spatula, Latin.] To rove; to range; to ramble at large.
Wonder causeth astonishment, or an immovable posture of the body, caused by the fixing of the mind upon one cogitation, whereby it doth not spatulate and transfer. Bacon.
- Confined to a narrow chamber, he could spatulate at large through the whole universe. Bentley.
- TO SPATTER, v. a. [from spat, Saxon.]
1. To sprinkle with dirt, or any thing offensive.
The pavement swam in blood, the walls around
Were spatter'd o'er with brains. Addison.
2. To throw out any thing offensive.
His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to spatter foul speeches, and to detract. Shaksp.
3. To asperse; to defame.
Yet durst not for Achilles' armour spat. Dryden.
- TO SPATTER, v. n. To spit; to spatter as at any thing nauseous taken into the mouth.
They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gists, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter adies, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton.
- SPATTERDASHES, n. f. [from spatter and dash.] Coverings for the legs by which the wet is kept off.
- SPATTLING PEPPI, n. f. White bechen. A plant which is a species of campion. Milner.
- SPATULA, n. f. [from spatula, Latin.] A spatte or slice.
Spatula is an instrument used by apothecaries and surgeons in spreading plasters or stirring medicines together. Quincy.
- In raising up the hairy scalp smooth with my spatula, I could discover no fault in the bone. Weyman's Surgery.
- SPAVIN, n. f. [from spavens, Fr. spavans, Italian.] A disease in horses is a bony excrescence or crusts hard as a bone, that grows on the inside of the hough, not far from the elbow, and is generated of the same matter by which the bones or ligaments are nourished: it is at first like a tender gristle, but by degrees comes to hardness.
They've all new legs and lame ones; one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin, Shaksp.
- And springhalt reign'd among them. Shaksp.
- If it had been a spavin, and the ass had petitioned for another farsier, it might have been reasonable. L'Estrange.
- SPAW, n. f. [from Spaw in Germany.] A place famous for mineral waters; any mineral water.
- TO SPAWL, v. n. [from spaw, Saxon.] To throw moisture out of the mouth.
He who does on iv'ry tables dine,
His marble floors with drunken spawlings shine. Dryden.
- What mischief can the dean have done him,
That Traulus calls for vengeance on him?
Why must he sputter, spawl, and flaver it,
In vain against the people's fav'rite. Swift.
- SPAWL, n. f. [from spawl, Saxon.] Spitte; moisture ejected from the mouth.
Of spitte she lustration makes;
Then in the spawl her middle finger dips,
Anoints the temples, forehead, and the lips. Dryden.
- SPAWN, n. f. [from spaw, Saxon.] The eggs of fish, or of frogs.
Masters of the people,
Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter
That's thousand to one good one? Shaksp.

SPE

- God said, let the waters generate Reptile, with spawn abundant, living soul! Milton.
- These ponds, in spawning time abounded with frogs, and A great deal of spawn. Ray on the Creation.
2. Any product or offspring. In contempt.
I was not the spawn of such as these
That dy'd with Punick blood the conquer'd seas, Reformation.
- And quaff'd the stern Basides. Tillotson.
- This atheistical humour was the spawn of the gross superstitions of the Romish church and court.
- TO SPAWN, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To produce as fishes do eggs.
Some report a sea-maid spawn'd him. Shaksp.
2. To generate; to bring forth. In contempt.
What practices such principles as these may spawn, when they are laid out to the sun, you may determine. Swift.
- TO SPAWN, v. n.
1. To issue as eggs from fish.
2. To issue; to proceed.
It is so ill a quality, and the mother of so many ill ones that spawn in it, that a child should be brought up in the greatest abhorrence of it.
- SPAWNER, n. f. [from spawn.] The female fish.
The barrel, for the preservation of their feed, both the spawner and the meler cover their spawn with sand. Walton.
- TO SPEAR, v. a. [from speari, Latin.] To caltrate female animals.
Be dumb you beggars of the rythming trade,
Gild your loose wits, and let your mule be spay'd. Cleavel.
- The males must be gels, and the fows spay'd; the spay'd they esteem as the most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon the inwards. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- TO SPEAK, v. n. [from speare, Saxon; spreek, Dutch.]
1. To utter articulate sounds; to express thoughts by words.
Speaking is nothing else than a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several determinations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significances.
Hannah spake in her heart, only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard. 1 Sam. i. 13.
2. To harangue; to make a speech.
Many of the nobility made themselves popular by speaking in parliament, against those things which were most grateful to his majesty, and which still passed notwithstanding their contradiction. Clarendon.
- Therites, though the most presumptuous Greek,
Yet durst not for Achilles' armour speak. Dryden.
3. To talk for or against; to dispute.
A knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speake for himself when a knave is not. Shaksp.
4. The general and his wife are talking of it;
And the speaks for you stoutly. Shaksp.
- When he had no power,
He was your enemy; still spake against Your liberties and charters. Shaksp.
5. To discourse; to make mention.
Were such things here as we do speake about?
Or have we eaten of the infinite root.
That takes the reason prisoner. Shaksp.
6. Lot went out and spoke unto his sons in law. Gen. xix. 14.
- The fire you speake of,
If any flames of it approach my fortunes,
I'll quench it not with water, but with ruin. Ben. Jonson.
- They could never be lost, but by an universal deluge which has been spoken to already. Tillotson's Sermons.
- Lucan speaks of a part of Caesar's army that came to him, from the Leman-lake, in the beginning of the civil war. Addison.
- Had Luther spoke up to this accusation, yet Chrysolom's example would have been his defence. Atterbury.
4. To give sound.
Make all your trumpets speake, give them all breath,
Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death. Shaksp.
5. TO SPEAK with, To address; to converse with.
Thou can't not fear us, Pompey, with thy fails,
We'll speake with thee at sea. Shaksp.
6. I spoke with one that came from thence,
That freely render'd me these news for true. Shaksp.
- Nicholas was by a herald sent for to come into the great bafa; Solymán unwilling to speake with him himself. Knoles.
- TO SPEAK, v. a.
1. To utter with the mouth; to pronounce.
Saul spoke not any think that day. 1 Sam. xx. 26.
2. To speak not any think that day.
Mordecai had spoken good. Ezra. vii. 1.
3. Consider of it, take advice, and speake your minds. Judges.
4. They sat down with him upon the ground, and none spoke a word. Job ii. 13.
5. When divers were hardened, and believed not, but spoke evil of that way before the multitude, he departed. Acts xix. 9.
6. You, from my youth,
Have known and try'd me, speake I more than truth? Sandys.

SPE

- What you keep by you, you may change and mend,
But words once spoke can never be recall'd. Waller.
- Under the tropick is our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke. Waller.
- He no where speaks it out, or in direct terms calls them substances. Locke.
- Colours speake all languages, but words are understood only by such a people or nation. Spaccator.
2. To proclaim; to celebrate.
It is my father's musick
To speake your deeds, not little of his care.
To have them recompended. Shaksp.
3. To address; to accost.
If he have need of thee, he will deceive thee, smile upon thee, put thee in hope, speake thee fair, and say, what wantest thou? Ecclus. xiii. 6.
4. To exhibit.
Let heav'n's wide circuit speake
The Maker's high magnificence. Milton.
- SPEAKABLE, adj. [from speake.]
1. Possible to be spoken.
2. Having the power of speech.
Says, Milton.
- How canst thou speakeable of mute.
- SPEAKER, n. f. [from speake.]
1. One that speaks.
These names grew so general, as the authors were lost in the generality of speakers. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. In conversation or reading, find out the true sense, idea which the speaker or writer affixes to his words. Watts's Logic.
- Common speakers have only one set of ideas, and one set of words to cloath them in; and these are always ready at the mouth. Swift.
2. One that speaks in any particular manner.
Horace's phrase is terribilis speari;
And happy was that curious speaker. Prior.
3. One that celebrates, proclaims, or mentions.
After my death, I with no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions
To keep mine honour from corruption. Shaksp.
4. The prolocutor of the commons.
I have disabled myself like an elected speaker of the house. Dryden.
- SPEAKING TRUMPET, n. f. A stentorophonick instrument; a trumpet by which the voice may be propagated to a great distance.
That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
And first taught speaking trumpet how to found. Dryden.
- SPEAR, n. f. [from spere, Welsh; spere, Saxon; spere, Dutch; spere, old French; sparium, low Lat.]
1. A long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting or throwing; a lance.
Th' Egyptian, like a hill, himself did rear,
Like some tall tree; upon it seem'd a spear. Cowley.
2. Not wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and spear. Milton.
- The flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air.
The rous'd up lion, resolute and slow,
Advances full on the pretended spear. Thompson.
2. A lance generally with prongs, to kill fish.
The borderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them, cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunter's mercy, who, by an old custom, share them with such indifferency, as if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the spear-hunters in taking of salmon. Carew.
- TO SPEAR, v. a. [from the noun.] To kill or pierce with a spear.
To spear, v. n. To shoot or sprout. This is commonly written spire.
Let them not lie lest they should spear, and the air dry and spoil the shoot. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- SPEARGRASS, n. f. [from spear and grass.] Long stiff grass.
Tickle our noses with speargrasses to make them bleed; and then bellobber our garments with it. Shaksp.
- SPEARMAN, n. f. [from spear and man.] One who uses a lance in fight.
The spearman's arm by thee, great God, directed,
Sends forth a certain wound. Prior.
- SPEARMINT, n. f. A plant; a species of mint.
- SPEARWORT, n. f. An herb. Answords.
- SPECIAL, adj. [from specialis, Latin.]
1. Noting a sort or species.
A special idea is called by the schools a species. Watts.
2. Particular; peculiar.
Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Sidney.
- The several books of scripture having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that special end whereunto they are intended. Hooker.

- Of all men alive
I never yet beheld that special face,
Which I could fancy more than any other. Shakespeare.
Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shakespeare.
Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture, as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interests to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.
O Neat, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a special act of parliament. Darvill.
4. Extraordinary; uncommon.
That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. Hooker.
Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised, but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spratt's Sermons.
5. Chief in excellence.
He bore
A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare. Hudibras.
- The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
- SPECIALTY. adv. [from special.] Particularity.
1. Particularly above others.
*Special*ly the day that thou stoodst before the Lord. Dante.
A brother beloved, *special*ly to me. Phil. xvi.
2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.
If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an attain, find it *special*ly.
Hale.
- SPECIALTY. n. f. [from special, French; from special.] Particularity.
On these two general heads all other specialties are dependent.
Hooker.
- The packet is not come,
Where that and other specialties are bound. Shakespeare.
Speciality of rule hath been neglected. Shakespeare.
When men were sure, that in case they rested upon a bare contract without speciality, the other party might waive his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a speciality which accorded many suits. Hale.
- SPECIALTY. n. f. [from special, Latin.] Particularity.
1. A fort; a subdivision of a general term.
A special idea is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: so horse is a special idea or species as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot, and Snowball. Watts.
2. Class of nature; single order of beings.
He intendeth only the care of the species or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- For we are animals no less,
Although of different species. Hudibras.
Thou canst't a race which must proceed from me,
Yet my whole species in myself I see. Dryden.
A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley's Sermons.
3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.
An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.
It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.
The species of the letters illuminated with blue were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct, that I could not read them. Newton's Opticks.
4. Representation to the mind.
Wit in the poet, or wit-writing is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.
5. Show; visible exhibition.
Shews and species serve best with the common people. Bacon.
6. Circulating money.
As there was in the time of the greatest splendour of the Roman empire, a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now, Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city.
Arithmetic on Coins.

7. Simples that have place in a compound.
SPECIFIC. adj. [from specific, French; specific and facis.]
SPECIFIC. n. f. [from specific, French; specific and facis.]
1. That which makes a thing of the species of which it is.
That thou to truth the perfect way may know,
To thee all her specific forms I'll show. Dante.
The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though as to the specific nature of its acts it is determined by the object. South.
By whole direction is the nutriment to regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities? Glavin.
These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered.
As all things were formed according to these specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.
Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight, which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Boyle.
The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt and earth appear to be the same in all plants. Arbutnot.
Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grapes; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.
2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular disease. It is usually applied to the arcanum, or medicines that work by occult qualities.
The operation of purging medicines have been referred to a hidden propriety, a specific virtue, and the like bits of ignorance. Bacon's Natural History.
If he would drink a good decoction of farfa, with the usual specifics, he might enjoy a good health. Watts.
- SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specific.] In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.
His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. Scull's Sermons.
Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no conceit of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple conceits, nor of any other universal. Greaves.
He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since; and that, if an ax head be supposed to float upon water which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural. Bentley.
- TO SPECIFY. v. a. [from species and facis.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.
Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imperative act of the divine special providence. Hale.
- SPECIFICATIONS. n. f. [from specific, specificatio, Fr.]
1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.
This specification or limitation of the question hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. Particular mention.
The constitution here speaks generally without the speci- fication of any place. Ascham's Paragon.
- TO SPECIFY. v. a. [from species; specific, Fr.] To mention; to show by some particular marks of distinction.
As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such, must be great. Hooker.
St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were. Burnet.
He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils are specified. Pope.
- SPECIMEN. n. f. [from specimen, Latin.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited that the rest may be known.
Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. Addison's Spectator.
- SPECTACIOUS. adj. [from spectare, Fr. spectatus, Latin.]
1. Showy; pleasing to the view.
The red, far greater part,
Will deem in outward rites and spectaculous forms, Religion fatisht. Milton.
She next I took to wife,
O that I never had fond with too late!
Was in the vale of Soree, Dalila, Milton.
That spectaculous monster, my accomplic'd foate. Milton.
2. Plausible;

3. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.
Bad men boast
Their spectaculous deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd over with zeal. Milton.
Somewhat of spectaculous they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will not easily go down in its natural form. Dryden.
Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the spectaculous names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.
This is the only spectaculous objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celebracy. Atterbury.
- SPECTACIOUSLY. adv. [from spectaculous.] With fair appearance.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and un sincerity; especially to that perfonated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised, and put off more spectaciously. Hammond.
- SPECTER. n. f. [from specter, Latin.] A small discolouration; a spot.
Every specter does not blind a man. Governor of the Tongue.
Then are they happy, when
No specter is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden's Aeneid.
- TO SPECTER. v. a. To spot; to stain in drops.
Flow
Carnation, purple, azure, or specter d with gold. Milton.
- SPECTRE. n. f. [from specter.] Small spot; little spot.
TO SPECTRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forlorn up aloft his specter d breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen.
- SPECTRUM. n. f. [from specter.] A small discolouration; a spot.
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould.
Saw't thou not late a specter d serpent rear
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.
The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and specter d snake;
Plea'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forked tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.
- The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the specter d and the white. Pope.
- SPECTRUM. n. f. [from specter.] A woodpecker. Answer.
- SPECTACLE. n. f. [from spectaculum, Latin.]
1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.
In open place produc'd they me,
To be a publick spectacle to all. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
We are made a spectacle unto angels, and men. 1 Cor. iv. 9.
2. Any thing perceived by the sight.
Forth riding underneath the castle wall,
A dunghill of dead carcases he spy'd,
The dreadful spectacle of that sad house of pride. Pope.
When pronouncing sentence, seem not glad,
Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad. Denham.
3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.
The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side. Shakespeare.
We have helps for the sight far above spectacles and glasses. Bacon.
- It is no fault in the spectacles that the blind man sees not.
Shakespeare was naturally learned: he needed not the specta- cles of books to read nature; he looked inwards and found her there. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.
The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets. Greaves.
This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by spectacles. Newton.
- That you are sick and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ills,
And talk of spectacles and pills. Swift.
- SPECTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with specta- cles.
All tongues speak of him, and the beared fights
Are spectacled to see him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- SPECTATION. n. f. [from spectatio, Latin.] Regard; respect.
This simple spectation of the lungs is differentiated from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey.
- SPECTATOR. n. f. [from spectator, Fr. spectator, Latin.] A looker on; a beholder.
More
Than history can pattern, though devis'd
And play'd, to take spectators. Shakespeare.
If it proves a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
An old gentleman mounting on horseback got up heavily;

- but desired the spectators that they would count fourscore and eight before they judged him. Dryden.
He mourns his former vigour lost to far,
To make him now spectator of a war. Dryden.
What pleasure hath the owner more than the spectator? Sead.
- SPECTRE. n. f. [from spectre, Fr. spectrum, Latin.] Apparition; appearance of persons dead.
The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatic spectres to rejoice. Dryden.
The very poetical use of the word for a spectre, doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. Stilling.
These are nothing but spectres the understanding raises to itself to flatter its own laziness. Lake.
- SPECTATORSHIP. n. f. [from spectator.] Act of beholding.
Thou stand'st it 'th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering. Shakespeare.
- SPECTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] An image; a visible form.
This prism had some veins running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which feathered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in encreasing the length of the coloured spectrum. Newton's Opticks.
- SPECTULAR. n. f. [from spectularis, Latin.]
1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking glass.
It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of spectular flames. Dante.
Quicksilver may by the fire alone, in glass-vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and spectular as before. Boyle.
A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from spectular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass whereof the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them. Newton.
2. Assisting sight. Improper.
The hidden way
Of nature would'st thou know, how first the frames
All things in miniature? thy spectular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels; lo!
In each observe the slender threads
Of first-beginning trees. Philips.
- TO SPECULATE. v. n. [from specular, Fr. specular, Lat.] To meditate; to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.
Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intrin-sical relation. Dryden on Bodies.
As our news-writers record many facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and by their variety of conjectures become consummate flatulents.
Addison.
- TO SPECULATE. v. a. To consider attentively; to look through with the mind.
Man was not meant to gaze, or look upward with the eye, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SPECULATION. n. f. [from speculation, Fr. from speculare.]
1. Examination by the eye; view.
2. Examiner; spy. This word is found no where else, and probably is here misprinted for speculator.
They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars
Throne and set high? servants
Which are to France the spies and speculations, Intelligent of our state. Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. Mental view; intellectual examination; contemplation.
In all these things being fully persuaded, that what they did, it was obedience to the will of God, and that all men should do the like; there remained after speculation, practice whereunto the whole world might be framed. Hooker.
Thenceforth to speculations high or deep,
I turn'd my thoughts; and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible. Milton.
News-writers afford matter of speculation. Addison.
4. A train of thoughts formed by meditation.
From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations. Temple.
5. Mental scheme not reduced to practice.
This terrestrial globe, which before was only round in specu- lation, has since been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.
6. Power of sight. Not in use.
Thy bones are marrowless; thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Thou star'st with. Shakespeare.
- SPECULATIVE. adj. [from specular, Fr. from speculare.]
1. Given to speculation; contemplative.
If all other uses were utterly taken away, yet the mind of man being by nature speculative and delighted with contemplation in itself, they were to be known even for mere knowledge sake. Hooker.
It encourages speculative persons who have no turn of mind to encrease their fortunes. Addison.
2. Theo-

SPE

2. Theoretical; notional; ideal; not practical.
Some take it for a speculative platform, that reason and nature would that the best should govern, but no wife to create a right. Bacon's holy War.
- SPECULATIVELY. adv. [from speculative.]
1. Contemplatively; with meditation.
2. Ideally; notionally; theoretically; not practically.
- SPECULATOR. n. s. [from speculate.]
1. One who forms theories.
He is dexterous in puzzling others, if they be not through-paced speculators in those great theories. Mere.
2. [Speculateur, French.] An observer; a contemplator.
Although lapidaries and quarry enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals, and natural speculators, conceive the stones which bear this name to be a mineral concretion. Brown.
3. A spy; a watcher.
All the boats had one speculator, to give notice when the fifth approached. Boone's Notes on the Odyssey.
- SPECULATORY. adj. [from speculate.] Exercising speculation.
- SPECULUM. n. s. [Latin.] A mirror; a looking-glass; that in which representations are formed by reflection.
A rough and coloured object may serve for a speculum, to reflect the artificial rainbow. Boyle on Colours.
- SPEED. The prerite and part. passive of speed.
His horse full of windgalls, speed with the spavins, and rayed with the yellows. Shakespeare.
Barbarossa, speed of that he desired, laid not long at Constantinople, but shaped his course towards Italy. Knollys.
With all his harness soon the god was speed; Dryden.
His flying hat, wings on his heels.
- SPEECH. n. s. [from speech.]
1. The power of articulate utterance; the power of expressing thoughts by vocal words.
There is none comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder on Speech.
Though our ideas are first acquired by various sensations and reflections, yet we convey them to each other by the means of certain sounds, or written marks, which we call words; and a great part of our knowledge is both obtained and communicated by these means, which are called speech. Watts.
2. Language; words considered as expressing thoughts.
In speech be eight parts. Accidence.
The acts of God to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.
3. Particular language as distinct from others.
There is neither speech nor language, but their voices are heard among them. Pf. Common Prayer.
4. Any thing spoken.
A plague upon your epileptick visage!
Smile you my speeches as I were a fool. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
5. Talk; mention.
The duke did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners, Concerning the French journey. Shakespeare.
Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom. Bacon's Essays.
6. Oration; harangue.
The constant design of these orators, in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point. Swift.
7. Liberty to speak.
I, with leave of speech implor'd, reply'd. Milton.
- SPEECHLESS. adj. [from speech.]
1. Deprived of the power of speaking; made mute or dumb.
He fell down, foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. Shakespeare.
The great god Pan hath broken his pipes, and Apollo's priests are become speechless. Raleigh.
A single vision transports them: it finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate when it departs. Dryden.
Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear. Addison.
2. Mute; dumb.
I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said rise: dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
From her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakespeare.
He that never hears a word spoken, it is no wonder he remain speechless; as any one must do, who from an infant should be bred up among mutes. Holder's Elements of Speech.
- TO SPEED. v. n. pret. and part. pass. speed and speeded. [from speed, Dutch.]
1. To make haste; to move with celerity.
So well they speed that they be come at length
Unto the place whereas the Paynim lay,
Devoid of outward sense and native strength,
Covered with charmed cloud from view of day. Fa. Queen.
Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have
I, in my poor and cold motion, the expedition of thought?
I speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility. Shak.
If pray'st
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard. Milton.

SPE

- See where Idwall speeds! a trusty soldier. A. Philips.
2. [Speeian, to grow rich, Saxon.] To have success.
Make me not fight like the basilisk:
I've look'd on thousands, who have speed the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
Now it this suit lay in Bianca's power,
How quickly should you speed. Shakespeare.
Macieus shewed them what an offence it was rashly to depart out of the city, which might be unto them dangerous, although they should speed never so well. Knollys.
When first this tempter cross'd the gulph from hell,
I told you then he should prevail, and speed in his bad errand. Milton.
These were violators of the first temple, and those that profaned and abused the second speed no better. South.
3. To have any condition good or bad.
Ships heretofore in seas like fishes speed,
The mightiest still upon the smallest fed. Waller.
- TO SPEED. v. a.
1. To dispatch in haste.
The tyrant's self, a thing unused, began
To feel his heart relent with meek compassion;
But not dispos'd to ruth or mercy then,
He speed him thence home to his habitation. Fairfax.
2. To furnish in haste.
To dispatch; to destroy; to kill.
With a speeding thrust his heart he found;
The lukewarm blood came rushing thro' the wound. Dryd.
A dire dilemma! either way I'm speed;
If foe, they write; if friends, they read me dead. Pope.
4. To mischief; to ruin.
5. To hasten; to put into quick motion.
She,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
Led hither by pure love. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.
Satan, tow'r'd the coast of earth beneath,
Down from th' ecliptick speed with hop'd success,
Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel. Milton.
The priest reply'd no more,
But speed his steps along the hoarse resounding shore. Dryden.
6. To execute; to dispatch.
Judicial acts are all those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are speed in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties. Ayliffe's Parergon.
7. To assist; to help forward.
Lucina
Reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throws. Dryden.
Propitious Neptune steer'd their course by night
With rising gales, that speed their happy flight. Dryden.
Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the Pole. Pope.
8. To make prosperous.
If any bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. St. Paul.
Timon is thrunk, indeed;
And he, that's once deny'd, will hardly speed. Shakespeare.
- SPEED. n. s. [from speed, Dutch.]
1. Quickness; celerity.
Earth receives
As tribute, such a sumless journey brought
Of incorporeal speed, her warmth and light; Milton.
Speed! to describe whose swiftness number fails.
We observe the horse's patient service at the plough, his speed upon the highway, his docibleness, and desire of glory. Mere.
2. Haste; hurry; dispatch.
When they train to their utmost speed, there is still the wonted distance between them and their aims: all their eager pursuits bring them no acquiescence. Decay of Piety.
3. The course or pace of a horse.
He that rides at high speed, and with a pistol, kills a sparrow flying. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
4. Success; event.
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone. Shakespeare.
O Lord, I pray thee send me good speed. Gen. xxiv. 12.
- SPEEDILY. adv. [from speedy.] With haste; quickly.
Post speedily to your husband, Shakespeare. King Lear.
Shew him this letter.
Send speedily to Bertran; charge him strictly Not to proceed. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
- SPEEDINESS. n. s. [from speedy.] The quality of being speedy.
- SPEEDWELL. n. s. [Veronica, Latin.] Fluellin. A plant.
The leaves grow opposite by pairs: the calyx consists of one leaf, which is divided into four parts, expanding in form of a star: the flower consists of one leaf, divided into four segments, expanding in a circular order: when the flower decays, the ovary becomes a membranaceous fruit, divided into two cells, shaped like an heart, and filled with seeds, sometimes small, and at other times large and thick. Miller.

SPE

- In a scarcity in Silefia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-seed; but 'twas found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham's Physico-Theology.
- SPEEDY. adj. [from speed.] Quick; swift; nimble; quick of dispatch.
How near's the other army?
—Near, and on speedy foot: the main defence Stands on the hourly thought. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Back with speediest fall
Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wings. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Came flying.
Let it be enough what thou hast done,
When spotted deaths ran arm'd through ev'ry street,
With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun,
The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden.
- SPELL. n. s. [Ispel, Saxon, a word.]
1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words:
Sunt verba & voces quibus hunc lenire dolorem Possis.
Start not; her actions shall be holy:
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dables. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Had not spells
And black enchantments, some magician's art,
Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong. Milton's Agonistes.
Begin, begin, the mystick spell prepare. Milton.
Yourself you to excel,
When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That like a spirit with this spell
Of my own teaching, I am caught. Waller.
Mild Lucina
Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes,
And spoke the pow'rful spells that babes to birth disclose. Dry.
2. A turn of work.
Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells: the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles. Carew.
- TO SPELL. v. a. [Spellen, Dutch.]
1. To write with the proper letters.
In the criticism of spelling, the word satire ought to be with i, and not with y; and if this be so, then it is false spelled throughout. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.
2. To read by naming letters singly.
I never yet saw man,
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featu'd,
But the would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakespeare.
3. To charm.
I have you fast:
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty. Shak. Henry VI.
This gather'd in the planetary hour,
With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of pow'r,
Dire stepdames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryden.
- TO SPELL. v. n.
1. To form words of letters.
What small knowledge was, in them did dwell;
And he a god, who could but read or spell. Dryden.
By passing on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats, has played himself into spelling. Locke.
The Latin, being written of the same character with the mother-tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book, it is legible. Speeulator.
Another cause, which hath maimed our language, is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift.
2. To read.
If I read aught in heav'n,
Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrows and labours, opposition, hate, Attends thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.
When gowns, not arms, repell'd
The fierce Epirote, and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd. Milton.
And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
Where I may fit and rightly spell
Of every star that heav'n doth thew,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.
3. To read unskillfully.
As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude unwritten blank; sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of creation. South.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newt.
- TO SPEND. v. a. [spenban, Saxon; spendere, Italian.]
1. To consume; to exhaust; to lay out.
Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent Shakespeare.
Against th' invulnerable clouds. 2 Cor. xii. 15.
I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. Prov. xxi. 20.
There is oil in the dwelling of the wife, but a foolish man spendeth it up.
We must exasperate
Th' almighty Victor to spend all his rage.
Thus labour could at first begin a title of property in the common things of nature, and spending it upon our uses bound it. Locke.
Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for. Locke.
2. To bestow as expence; to expend.
Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Is. lv. 2.
3. To effuse.
Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the proposed opinion. Boyle.
4. To squander; to lavish.
They bend their bows, they whirl their slings around;
Heaps of spent arrows fall, and threw the ground. Dryden.
The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend their estates. Wake.
5. To pass.
When we can intreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job xxi. 13.
He spends his life with his wife, and remembereth neither father nor mother. Eccl. iv. 21.
When he was of riper years, for his farther accomplishment, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. Pope.
6. To waste; to wear out.
In those pastoral pastimes a great many days were spent, to follow their flying predecessors. Sidney.
The waves ascended and descended, 'till their violence being spent by degrees, they settled at last. Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.
The winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury, and direct it right,
'Till it has spent itself on Cato's head. Addison's Cato.
7. To fatigue; to harass.
Nothing but only the hope of spoil did relieve them, having scarce clothes to cover their nakedness, and their bodies spent with long labour and thirst. Knollys's History of the Turks.
Or come your shipping in our ports to lay,
Spent and disabled in so long a way? Dryden's Æn.
Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,
And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.
Some spent with toil, some with despair oppress'd,
Leap'd headlong from the heights, the flames consum'd the rest. Dryden's Æn.
Thou oft hast seen me
Wrestling with vice and faction; now thou see'st me
Spent, overpowered, despairing of success. Addison's Cato.
- TO SPEND. v. n.
1. To make expence.
Henceforth your tongue must spend at lesser rate,
Than in its flames to wrap a nation's fate. Dryden.
He spends as a person who knows that he must come to a reckoning. South.
2. To prove in the use.
Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil. Temple.
3. To be lost or wasted.
The sound spendeth and is dissipated in the open air; but in such concaves it is conserved and contracted. Bacon.
On mountains, it may be, many dews fall, that spend before they come to the valleys. Bacon.
4. To be employed to any use.
There have been cups and an image of Jupiter made of wild vines; for the vines that they use for wine are so often cut, that their sap spendeth into the grapes. Bacon.
- SPENDER. n. s. [from spend.]
1. One who spends.
Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but healthful, short, and apt to refresh you. Taylor.
2. A

SPE

2. A prodigal; a lavish.

Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were sparing, tell them that they must needs have, because they laid up, and if they were spenders, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living. Bacon's Henry VII.

SPE'NDTHRIFT. n. f. [spend and thrif.] A prodigal; a lavish.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spend-thrift.

Some fawning usurer does feed
With present fums th' unwary spendthrift's need. Dryden.

Most men, like spendthrifts heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come.

The son, bred in sloth, becomes a spendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar. Swift.

SPE'NABLE. adj. [spenabilis, Latin.] Such as may be hoped.

We may cast it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discharge it of so much as is vain and not spenable. Bacon.

SPE'RM. n. f. [spermes, Fr. sperma, Lat.] Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and some but one: this may be caused by the quantity of sperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may fever the sperm.

There is required to the preparation of the sperm of animals a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. Ray.

SPE'RMACE'IT. n. f. [Latin.] Corruptedly pronounced parmasity.

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperma, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is to shoot into flakes, not much unlike the crystallization of salts; but in this state 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates in a press, and afterwards exposing the remainder to the open air: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent. Quincy.

SPE'RMATICAL. adj. [spermatique, Fr. from sperm.]

SPE'RMATICK. adj. [spermatique, Fr. from sperm.]

1. Seminal; consisting of seed.

The primordial of the world are not mechanical, but spermatical or vital. More's Divine Dialogues.

Metals and fundry meteors rude shapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the sperm.

The moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. Bacon.

Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatick vessels, wherein the more spirituous part of the blood is by many digestions and circulations exalted into sperm. Ray on the Creation.

TO SPE'RMATIZE. v. n. [from sperm.] To yield seed.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermatize, and confer a receptacle rather than essential principles of generation, deductively includes both sexes in mankind. Brown.

SPE'RMATOC'EL. n. f. [spermatocela, and celle.] A rupture caused by the contraction of the feminal vessels, and the semen falling into the scrotum. Bailey.

SPE'RMOTOGIST. n. f. [spermatogist.] One who gathers or treats of seeds. Dist.

TO SPERSE. v. a. [spersus, Latin.] To disperse; to scatter.

A word not now in use.

The wrathful wind,
Which blows cold storms, burst out of Scythian mew
That spers those clouds, and in so short as thought
His dreadful shape was vanished to nought. Spenser.

He making speedy way through spersed air,
And through the world of waters wide and deep,
To Morpheus' house doth hastily repair. Fairy Queen.

TO SPET. v. a. To bring or pour abundantly. [Spet in Scotland is a superabundance of water: as, that tide or fresh was a high spet.]

Myfisterious dame,
That ne'er art call'd, but when the dragon womb
Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air,
Stop thy cloudy ebony chair. Milton.

TO SPEW. v. a. [spewen, Saxon; spewen, Dutch.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the stomach.

A swordfish small him from the rest did funder,
That in his throat him pricking loftly under
His wide abyss, him forced forth to spew,
That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder,
And all the waves were stain'd with filthy hue. Spenser.

2. To eject; to cast forth.

When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er,
Or hollow places spew their wat'ry store. Dryden's Georg.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show;
And when the fouler bottom spews the black,
The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abominations, that the land spew not you out. Lev. xviii. 28.

Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. Bacon's Essays.

TO SPEW. v. n. To vomit; to eate the stomach.

He could have haud' in
The drunkards, and the noises of the inn;
But better 'twas that they should sleep or spew,
Than in the scene to offend or him or you. Ben. Johnson.

SPE'WY. adj. [from spew.] A provincial word.

The lower valleys in wet Winters are so spewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO SPHA'CLATE. v. a. [from sphaclatus, medical, Latin.] To affect with a gangrene.

The long retention of matter sphaclates the brain. Sharp.

TO SPHA'CLATE. v. n. To mortify; to suffer the gangrene.

The skin, by the great distension, having been rendered very thin, will, if not taken away, sphaclate, and the rest degenerate into a cancerous ulcer. Sharp's Surgery.

SPHA'CELUS. n. f. [sphaclatus, Fr. sphaclate, Fr.] A gangrene; a mortification.

It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, sphaclatus. Wifon.

SPHERE. n. f. [sphere, French; sphaera, Latin.]

1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the center is at the same distance from every point of the circumference.

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fram'd. Milton.

2. Any globe of the mundane system.

What if within the moon's fair shining sphere,
What if in every other star unseen,
Of other worlds he happily should hear? Fairy Queen.

And then mortal ears
Had heard the music of the spheres. Dryden.

3. A globe representing the earth or sky.

Two figures on the sides embold' appear;
Conon, and what's his name who made the sphere,
And shew'd the seasons of the sliding year. Dryden.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.

Half unfung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere. Milton.

5. Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment.

[From the sphere of activity ascribed to the power emanating from bodies.]

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move
And in the spiced Indian air by night
Full often the hath go'ip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great-grand-children of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Denne.

What though some have a freight
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPIC'ER. n. f. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Salter and Spicer.

SPIC'ERY. n. f. [spicerie, French; from spice.]

1. The commodity of spices.

Their camels were laden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh's History of the World.

She in whole body
The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africa, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found. Denne.

2. A repository of spices.

The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison on Italy.

SPICK and SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Sax. spanner, Lat. whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth new extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used.

While the honour, thou hast got,
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely. Butler.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burnet.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPIC'ER. n. f. The herb maldmomy or bearwort. Dist.

SPIC'V. adj. [from spice.]

1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatics.

For them the Idumean balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceylon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

SPIC'V. adj. [from spice.]

1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatics.

For them the Idumean balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceylon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromatick; having the qualities of spice.

Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabrean odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest, with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course, and many a league, Chear'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milton.

The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscolity. Arbutnot on Diet.

Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPIC'OSITY. n. f. [spica, Latin.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fulness of ears. Dist.

SPIDER. n. f. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin: Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίς, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spiden, Dutch; speyden, Danish, to spy, to lye upon the catch. Don, dopa, saxon, is a beetle, or properly an humble bee, or humble bee. May not spider be spider, the insect that watches the door?] The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hag betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Shakespeare.

The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand Drayton.

The innocent to free.

Invidious, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom;
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy banners round my room:
While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state. Dr. Litleton.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

SPID'ERWORT. n. f. [spalangium, Latin.] A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals. Miller.

SPIC'NEL. n. f. [spica, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it is an umbelliferous plant, with very narrow leaves: the seeds are large, oblong, and striated. To which may be added, it hath a perennial root. It is medicinal. Miller.

SPIC'OT. n. f. [spijker, Dutch.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor.

Bafe Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield. Shakespeare.

Take out the spigot, and clap the point in your mouth. Sw.

SPIKER. n. f. [spica, Latin.]

1. An ear of corn.

Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes
Guard it from birds as with a stand of pikes. Denham.

Suffering not the yellow beards to rear,
He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the year. Dryden.

The gleaners,
Spike after spike, their sparing harvest pick. Thomson.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oaken timber; and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them. Bacon.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower. Dryden.

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun. Addison.

SPIKE. n. f. The name of a plant. This is a smaller species of lavender.

The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated. Hill's Mat. Med.

TO SPIKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with long nails.

Lay long planks upon them, pinned or spiked down to the pieces of oak on which they lie. Mason's Mech. Exer.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To fet with spikes.

A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frighted down, and in his falling he was caught by those spikes. Wifon.

SPIC'ENARD. n. f. [spica nardi, Latin.] A plant, and the oil or balsam produced from the plant.

There are three sorts of spikenard. 1. The Indian spikenard is most famous: it is a congeries of fibrous substances adhering to the upper part of the root, of an agreeable aromatick and bitterish taste: it grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages. 2. Celtic spikenard is an oblong root, of an irregular figure, a fragrant and aromatick but not very pleasant smell. It had its name from Celtic Gaul, and is still found in great abundance on the Alpine and Pyrenean mountains. 3. Mountain spikenard

SPILL. n. f. [ſpilen, Dutch.]

1. A ſmall ſhiver of wood, or thin bar of iron. The oysters, beſides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick ſtrong net, faſtened to three ſpills of iron, and drawn at the boat's ſtern. Carew.

Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole, ſtopped with a ſpill. Mortimer.

2. A ſmall quantity of money. I know not whence derived. The biſhops, who conſecrated this ground, were wont to have a ſpill or ſportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe.

To SPILL. v. a. [ſpillan, Saxon; ſpillen, Dutch; ſpilla, Italian.]

1. To ſhed; to loſe by ſhedding. Be ſatisfied, dear God, with our true blood, Which, as thou know'ſt, unjuſtly muſt be ſpilt. Shakeſp.

Friend or brother, He forfeits his own blood that ſpills another. Shak. Timon.

And I conſtrained am this blood to ſpill. Daniel's Civil War.

They having ſpilt much blood, and done much wale, Subduing nations; and atchiev'd thereby Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey, Shall change their courſe to pleaſure, eaſe, and loth. Milton.

Medea muſt not draw her murd'ring knife, And ſpill her childrens blood upon the ſtage. Rojcommon.

Orbelian did diſgrace With treach'rous deeds our mighty mother's race; And to revenge his blood, ſo juſtly ſpilt, What is it leſs than to partake his guilt? Dryden.

Nor the Centaurs tale Be here repeated; how, with luſt and wine Inſam'd, they fought and ſpilt their drunken ſouls At feaſting hour. Philips.

2. To deſtroy; to miſchief. Thus is our thought with pain of thiffle tilled, Thus be our nobleſt parts dried up with forrow; Thus is our mind with too much minding ſpilled. Sidney.

Why are ye ſo fierce and cruel? Is it becauſe your eyes have power to kill? Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel, And greater glory think to ſave than ſpill. Spencer.

Thou all-thriving thunder, Crack nature's mould, all germins ſpill at once That make ingrateful man. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Be not angry with theſe fees; For then their threats will kill me; Nor look too kind on my deſires; For then my hopes will ſpill me. Ben. Jonſon.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd; But ſhe receives both heav'n and earth together: Nor are their forms by raſh encounters ſpill'd; For there they ſtand, and neither toucheth either. Davies.

3. To throw away. This fight ſhall damp the raging ruſſian's breaſt, The poiſon ſpills, and half-drawn ſword arreſt. Tickell.

To SPILL. v. n.

1. To waſte; to be laſivh. Thy father bids thee ſpare, and chides for ſpilling. Sidney.

2. To be ſhed; to be loſt by being ſhed. He was ſo topfull of himſelf, that he let it ſpill on all the company: he ſpoke well indeed, but he ſpoke too long. Watts.

SPILLER. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of fiſhing line.

In harbour they are taken by ſpillers, made of a cord, to which divers ſhorter are tied at a little diſtance, and to each of theſe a hook is faſtened with a bait: this ſpiller they ſink in the ſea where thoſe fiſhes have their accuſtomed haunt. Carew.

SPILLTH. n. f. [from ſpill.] Any thing poured out or waſted. Our vaults have wept with drunken ſpillth of wine. Shakeſp.

To SPIN. v. a. preter. ſpun or ſpan; part. ſpun. [ſpinnan, Sax. ſpinnen, Dutch.]

1. To draw out into threads. The women ſpun goats hair. Ex. xxxv. 26.

2. To form threads by drawing out and twiſting any filamentous matter. You would be another Penelope; yet they ſay all the yarn the ſpun, in Ulyſſes's abſence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

The fates but only ſpin the coarſer clue; The fineſt of the wool is left for you. Dryden.

3. To protract; to draw out. By one delay after another they ſpin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left before 'em. L'Eſtrange.

If his cure lies among the lawyers' let nothing be ſaid againſt intangling property, ſpinning out cauſes, and ſqueezing clients. Cellier.

Why ſhould Rome fall a moment ere her time? No, let us draw her term of freedom out In its full length, and ſpin it to the laſt. Addiſon's Cat.

4. To form by degrees; to draw out tediouſly. I paſſed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might ſpin out large volumes. Digby.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehenſions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being ſpun out of my own coarſe thoughts, is fitted to men of my own ſize. Lake.

The lines are weak, another's plea'd to ſay; Lord Fanny ſpins a thouſand ſuch a day. Pope.

To SPIN. v. n.

1. To exerciſe the art of ſpinning. We can ſling our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that ſpin. Mora.

Ten thouſand ſtalks their various bloſſoms ſpread; Peaceful and lowly in their native ſoil, They neither know to ſpin, nor care to toil. Prior.

For this Alcides learn'd to ſpin; His club laid down, and lion's ſkin. Prior.

2. [Spingare, Italian.] To ſteam out in a thread or ſmall current. Together furiously they ran, The to the ground came horſe and man; The blood out of their helmets ſpan, So ſharp were their encounters. Drayton's Nymphid.

3. To move round as a ſpindle. Whether the ſun, predominant in heav'n, Riſe on the earth, or earth riſe on the ſun, He from the Eaſt his flaming road begin, Or ſhe from Weſt her ſilent courſe advance With inoffenſive pace, that ſpinning ſleeps On her ſoft axle, while the paces ev'n And bears theſe ſoft with the ſmooth air along, Solicit not thy thoughts. Milton's Paraſite Left, b. viii.

As when a ſhipwright ſtands his workmen o'er, Who ply the wimble ſome huge beam to bore; Urg'd on all hands it nimbly ſpins about, The grain deep piercing 'till it ſcoops it out. Pope.

SPINACH. n. f. [ſpinachia, Latin.] A plant. It hath an apetalous flower, conſiſting of many ſtamens included in the flower-cup, which are produced in ſpikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundiſh or angular ſeeds, which in ſome ſorts, have thorns adhering to them. Müller.

Spinage is an excellent herb crude, or boiled. Mortimer.

SPINALE. adj. [ſpina, Latin.] Belonging to the back bone. All ſpinal, or ſuch as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are ſomewhat analogous thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errata.

Thoſe ſolids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain, and ſpinal marrow, which by their bulk appear ſufficient to furniſh all the ſtamens or threads of the ſolid parts. Art.

Descending careleſs from his couch, the fall Lux'd his joint neck and ſpinal marrow bruiz'd. Philips.

SPINDLE. n. f. [ſpindel, ſpindel, Saxon.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated. Bodies fibrous by moiſture incorporate with other threads, eſpecially if there be a little wreathing; as appeared by the twiſting of thread, and twirling about of ſpindles. Bacon.

Sing to thoſe that hold the vital ſecrets, And turn the adamant ſpindle round On which the fate of gods and men is wound. Milton.

Upon a true repentance, God is not ſo fatally tied to the ſpindle of abſolute reprobation as not to keep his promiſe, and ſeal merciful pardons. Dr. Jaſper Maitland.

So Pallas from the duſty field withdrew, And when imperial Jove appear'd in view, Reſum'd her female arts, the ſpindle and the clew; Forgot the ſcepter ſhe ſo well had ſway'd, And with that mildneſs, ſhe had rul'd, obey'd. Stepens.

Do you take me for a Roman matron, Bred tamely to the ſpindle and the loom? A. Phillips.

2. A long ſlender ſtalk. The ſpindles muſt be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods fet by them, left by their bending they ſhould break. Mora.

3. Any thing ſlender. In contempt. Repoſe yourſelf, if thoſe ſpindle legs of yours will carry you to the next chair. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

The marriage of one of our heiresses with an eminent courtier gave us ſpindle ſhanks and cramps. Tatler.

To SPINDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To ſhoot into a long ſmall ſtalk. Another ill accident in drought is the ſpindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inſomuch as the word calamity was firſt derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the ſtalk. Bacon.

When the flowers begin to ſpindle, all but one or two of the biggeſt, at each root, ſhould be nipped off. Mortimer.

SPINDLESHANKED.

10. Sentiment; perception.
You are too great to be by me gainfald;
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain. Shakespeare.
11. Eagerness; desire.
God has changed mens tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.
12. Man of activity; man of life, fire and enterprise.
The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shakespeare.
13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.
Such spirits as he desired to please, such would I chuse for my judges. Dryden.
14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body bordering, says Swanham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.
Though thou didst but jest:
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakespeare's King John.
- When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
- Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;
What can we know, or what can we discern? Davies.
- To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays. Dryden.
- By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed.
Derham.
- In some fair body thus the secret foul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole;
Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in the effects remains.
The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.
15. The likeness; essential qualities.
Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a defending light, which of all other doth set off mens faces in their truest spirit. Wotton.
16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.
Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Shakespeare.
17. That which hath power or energy.
All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them;
but the main difference between animate and inanimate are,
that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow.
Bacon's Natural History.
18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation.
What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many differing things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor. Boyle.
- All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. Temple.
- In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil; if it will, it is spirit.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
19. It may be observed, that in the old poets spirit was commonly a monosyllable, being written spight or spite.
The charge thereof unto a courteous spight Commanded was. Spenser.
- To SPIRIT. v. a.
1. To animate or actuate as a spirit.
So talk'd the spirited fly snake. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. To excite; to animate; to encourage.
He will be faint in any execution of such a counsel, unless spirited by the unanimous decrees of a general diet. Temple.
- Civil dissensions never fail of introducing and spiriting the ambition of private men. Swift on the Cont. in Athens and Rome.
- Many officers and private men spirit up and assist those obstinate people to continue in their rebellion. Swift.
3. To draw; to entice.
In the southern coast of America, the southern point of the needle varieth toward the land, as being disposed and spirited that way, by the meridional and proper hemisphere. Brown.
- The ministry had him spirited away, and carried abroad as a dangerous person. Arbutnot and Pope.
- SPIRITUALLY. adv. [from spiritus, Latin.] By means of the breath.
Conceive one of each pronounced spiritaly, the other vocally. Holder's Elements of Speech.

mind.
He showed the narrow spiritedness, pride, and ignorance of pedants. Arbutnot.
- SPIRITFULNESS. n. f. [from spirit and full.] Sprightliness;
liveliness.
A cocks crowing is, a tone that corresponds to singing, attesting his mirth and spiritfulness. Harvey.
- SPIRITLESS. adj. [from spirit] Dejected; low; deprived of vigour; wanting courage; depressed.
A man so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe begone,
Drew Priam's curtain. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
- Of their wonted vigour left them drain'd,
Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, fall'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- Nor did all Rome, grown spiritless, supply
A man that for bold truth durst bravely die. Dryden.
- Art thou so base, so spiritless a slave?
Not to be bore the fate to which you doom'd him. Smith.
- SPIRITUOS. adj. [from spirit.]
1. Refined; defecated; advanced near to spirit.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure,
As nearer to him plac'd, or nearer tending. Milton.
2. Fine; ardent; active.
SPIRITUOSNESS. n. f. [from spirituous.] Fineness and activity of parts.
They, notwithstanding the great thinness and spirituousness of the liquor, did, before they broke, lift up the upper surface, and for a moment form a thin film like a small lens. Huygens.
- SPIRITUAL. adj. [from spiritus, Fr. from spirit.]
1. Distinct from matter; immaterial; incorporeal.
Echo is a great argument of the spiritual essence of sounds;
for if it were corporeal, the repercussion should be created by like instruments with the original sound. Bacon.
- Both visibles and audibles in their working emit no corporeal substance into their mediums, but only carry certain spiritual species. Bacon.
- All creatures, as well spiritual as corporeal, declare their absolute dependence upon the first author of all beings, the only self-existent God.
2. Mental; intellectual.
The same disaster has invaded his spiritual; the passions rebel; and there are so many governours, that there can be no government. South.
3. Not gross; refined from external things; relative only to the mind.
Some who pretend to be of a more spiritual and refined religion, spend their time in contemplation, and talk much of communion with God. Calamy's Sermons.
4. Not temporal; relating to the things of heaven; ecclesiastical.
Place man in some public society, civil or spiritual. Hobbes.
- Thou art reverend,
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life. Shakespeare.
- I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation. Shakespeare.
- As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy did.
Spiritual armour, able to resist
Satan's assaults. Milton.
- The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of mens souls, than for spiritual persons to make themselves as agreeable as they can in the conversations of the world. Swift.
- SPIRITUALITY. n. f. [from spiritual.]
1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence distinct from matter.
If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then of all other the most subtle and pure. Raiglen.
2. Intellectual nature.
A pleasure made for the soul; suitable to its spirituality, and equal to all its capacities. South's Sermons.
3. [Spirituality, Fr.] Acts independent of the body; pure acts of the soul; mental refinement.
Many secret indispositions and averfions to duty will steal upon the soul, and it will require both time and close application of mind to recover it to such a frame, as shall dispense for the spiritualities of religion. South's Sermons.
4. That which belongs to any one as an ecclesiastick.
Of common right, the dean and chapter are guardians of the spiritualities, during the vacancy of a bishoprick. Arbutnot.
- SPIRITUALTY. n. f. [from spiritual.] Ecclesiastical body.
We of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time. Shakespeare.
- SPIRITUALIZATION. n. f. [from spiritualize.]
Spiritualizing.
To SPIRITUALIZE. v. a. [from spiritualize, Fr. from spirit.] To refine the intellect; to purify from the feculencies of the world.
This would take it much out of the care of the soul, to spiritualize and replenish it with good works. Hammond.

S P I

- We begin our survey from the lowest dregs of sense, and to ascend to our more spiritualized selves. Glancville.
- As to the future glory in which the body is to partake, that load of earth which now engages to corruption, must be calcin'd and spiritualized, and thus be clothed upon with glory. Decay of Piety.
- If man will act rationally, he cannot admit any competition between a momentary satisfaction, and an everlasting happiness, as great as God can give, and our spiritualized capacities receive. Rogers's Sermons.
- SPIRITUALLY. adv. [from spiritual.] Without corporeal grossness; with attention to things purely intellectual.
In the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor's Rule of holy Living.
- SPIRITUOUS. adj. [from spirituous, Fr. from spirit.]
1. Having the quality of spirit, tenacity and activity of parts.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure,
As to him nearer tending. Milton.
- The most spirituous and most fragrant part of the plant
exhales by the action of the sun. Arbutnot.
2. Lively; gay; vivid; airy.
It may appear airy and spirituous, and fit for the welcome of cheerful guests. Watson's Architecture.
- SPIRITUOSITY. n. f. [from spirituous.] The quality of being spirituous; tenacity and activity.
To SPIRIT. v. n. [from spiritus, Dutch, to shoot up, Stinner.]
1. To sprout, Swedish, to fly out. Lye. To spring out in a sudden stream; to stream out by intervals.
Botling of beer, while new and full of spirit, so that it spirit-eth when the stopple is taken forth, maketh the drink more quick and windy. Bacon's Natural History.
- Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Springs in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.
- To SPIRIT. v. a. To throw out in a jet.
When weary Proteus
Retir'd for shelter to his wonted caves,
His fenny flocks about their shepherd play,
And rowling round him, spirit the bitter sea. Dryden.
- When rains the passage hide,
Of the loose fens spirit up a muddy tide
Beneath thy careless foot. Gay.
- To SPIRIT. v. a. [A corruption of spirit.] To dissipate.
The terraqueous globe would, by the centrifugal force of that motion, be soon diffused and spirited into the circumambient space, was it not kept together by this noble contrivance of the Creator. Derham's Physico-Theology.
- SPIRE. adj. [from spire.]
1. Pyramidal.
Waste sandy valleys, once perplex'd with thorn,
The spire firm, and shapely box adorn. Pope's Messiah.
- In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spire turrets crown'd,
Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.
2. Wreathed; curled.
Hid in the spire volumes of the snake,
I lurk'd within the covert of a brake. Dryden.
- SPISS. adj. [from spissus, Latin.] Close; firm; thick.
From his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this spiss and dense, yet polished, this copious, yet concise treatise of the variety of languages. Bracewood.
- SPISSITUDE. n. f. [from spissus, Latin.] Grossness; thickness.
Drawing wine or beer from the lees, called racking, it will clarify the sooner; for though the lees keep the drink in heart, and make it lasting, yet they cast up some spissitude. Bacon.
- SPISSITUDE is subdued by acrid things, and acrimony by in-spissating. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- SPIR. n. f. [from spira, Saxon; spira, Dutch; spira, Italian.]
1. A long prong on which meat is driven to be turned before the fire.
A goodly city is this Antium;
'Tis I that made thy widows; then know me not,
Left that thy wives with spirs, and boys with stones
In puny battle lay me. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- They may be contrived to the moving of sails in a chimney corner, the motion of which may be applied to the turning of a spit. Wright's Mathematical Magick.
- With Peggy Dixon thoughtful sit,
Contriving for the pot and spit. Swift.
2. Such a depth of earth as is pierced by one action of the spade.
Where the earth is washed from the quick, face it with the first spit of earth dug out of the ditch. Martimer.
- To SPIR. v. a. Preterite spat; participle pass. spit, or spitted, [from the noun.]
1. To put upon a spit.
I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body Upon a rapier's point. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

S P I

2. To thrust through.
I spitted frogs, I crush'd a heap of emmets. Dryden.
- To SPIR. v. a. [from spira, Saxon; spytter, Danish.] To eject from the mouth.
A large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks and seas.
Shakespeare's King John.

the eyes of the blind man. John ix. 6.
- A maid came from her father's house to one of the tribunals of the Gentiles, and declaring herself a Christian, spit in the judge's face. South.
- A drunkard men abhor, and would even spit at him, were it not for fear he should something more than spit at them.
South's Sermons.
- Spit on your finger and thumb, and pinch the snuff till the candle goes out. Swift's Rules for the Servants.
- SPI'TAL. n. f. [Corrupted from hospital.] A charitable foundation. In use only in the phrase, a spital sermon, and reb not the spital.
- To SPITCHECK. v. a. To cut an eel in pieces and roast him.
Of this word I find no good etymology.
No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spit-brook cel. King.
- SPIITE. n. f. [from spite, Dutch; despit, French.]
1. Malice; rancour; hate; malignity; malevolence.
This breeding rather spite than shame in her, or, if it were a shame, a shame not of the fault, but of the repulse, she did thirst for a revenge. Shakespeare.
- Bewray they did their inward boiling spite,
Each stirring others to revenge their cause. Daniel.
- Done all to spite
The great Creator; but their spite still serves His glory to augment. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- Be gone, ye critics, and refrain your spites,
Codrus writes on, and will for ever write. Pope.
2. SPITE OF, or IN SPITE OF. Notwithstanding; in defiance of.
It is often used without any malignity of meaning.
Blessed be such a preacher, whom God made use of to speak a word in season, and saved me in spite of the world, the devil, and myself. South.
- In spite of me I love, and see too late
My mother's pride must find my mother's fate. Dryden.
- For thy lov'd sake, spite of my boding fears,
I'll meet the danger which ambition brings. Rowe.
- My father's fate,
In spite of all the fortitude that shines
Before my face in Cato's great example, Subdues my soul, and fills my eyes with tears. Addis. Cato.
- In spite of all applications the patient grew worse every day. Arbutnot.
- To SPIITE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mischief; to treat maliciously; to vex; to thwart ma-lignantly.
Beguill'd, divorc'd, wronged, spighted, slain,
Most detestable death, by thee. Shakespeare.
- I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spight a raven's heart within a dove. Shakespeare.
2. To fill with spite; to offend.
So with play did he a good while fight against the fight of Zelmane, who, more spited with that courtesy, that one that did nothing should be able to resist her, burned away with choler any motions which might grow out of her own sweet disposition. Sidney.
- Darius, spited at the magi, endeavoured to abolish not only their learning but their language. Tem. k.
- SPI'ITEFUL. adj. [from spite and full.] Malicious; malignant.
The Jews were the deadliest and spitefullest enemies of Christianity that were in the world, and in this respect their orders to be shunned. Hooker.
- All you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spightful and wrathful. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- Contempt is a thing made up of an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. South's Sermons.
- The spiteful stars have shed their venom down,
And now the peaceful planets take their turn. Dryden.

SPI'ITEFULLY.

SPL

SPI'ITFULLY, adv. [from spiteful.] Maliciously; malignantly.
Twice false Evadne, spitefully forsworn.
That fatal beast like this I would have torn.
Vanceia fat,
Scarce lifting to their idle chat,
Further than sometimes by a frown,
When they grew pert, to pull them down;
At last the spitefully was bent
To try their wisdom's full extent.
SPI'ITFULNESS, n. f. [from spiteful.] Malice; malignity; desire of vexing.
It looks more like spitefulness and ill-nature, than a diligent search after truth.
SPI'TTED, adj. [from spit.] Shot out into length.
Whether the head of a deer, that by age is more spitted, may be brought again to be more branched.
SPI'TTER, n. f. [from spit.]
1. One who spits meat on a spit.
2. One who spits with his mouth.
3. A young deer.
SPI'TTLE, n. f. [Corrupted from spital, and therefore better written spital, or spital.] Hospital. It is still retained in Scotland.
To the spittle go,
And from the pow'dring tub of infamy
Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind.
This is it
That makes the waned widow wed again;
She whom the spittle house, and ulcerous sores,
Would cast the gorge at, this embalsms and spices
To th' April-day again.
Cure the spittle world of maladies.
SPI'TTLE, n. f. [procelian, Saxon.] Moisture of the mouth.
The saliva or spittle is an humour of eminent use.
Maurus and Arys in the mouth were bred,
And never hatch'd within the lab'ring head;
No blood from bitten nails those poems drew,
But churn'd like spittle from the lips they flew.
The spittle is an active liquor, immediately derived from the arterial blood: it is saponaceous.
A genius for all stations fit,
Whose meanest talent is his wit;
His heart too great, though fortune little,
To lick a rascal statesman's spittle.
SPI'TVENOM, n. f. [from spit and venom.] Poison ejected from the mouth.
The spitvenom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others.
SPLANCHNOLOGY, n. f. [from splanchnologie, French; σπλάνχνα and λογία.] A treatise or description of the bowels.
To SPLASH, v. a. [from spaska, Swedish.] They have both an affinity with plash. To daub with dirt in great quantities.
SPLASHY, adj. [from spashy.] Full of dirty water; apt to daub.
SPLA'YFOOT, adj. [from spashy and foot.] Having the foot turned inward.
I though still some traces of our rustick vein,
And spashy verse remain'd, and will remain.
SPLA'YMOUTH, n. f. [from spashy and mouth.] Mouth widened by design.
All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hadst thou but Janus-like a face behind,
To see the people when spashymouth they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot.
SPLEEN, n. f. [from splen, Latin.]
1. The milt; one of the viscera, of which the use is scarcely known. It is supposed the seat of anger and melancholy.
If the wound be on the left hypochondrium, under the short ribs, you may conclude the spleen wounded.
2. Anger; spite; ill-humour.
If the milt teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live on
And be a thwart distast'd torment to her.
Charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul.
Kind pity checks my spleen; brave scorn forbids
Those tears to issue, which swell my eye-lids.
The least respect; and thus they vent their spleen aloud:
Lay down those honour'd spoils.
In noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and four distain.
3. A fit of anger.
Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heav'n and earth;
And ere a man hath power to say, behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up.
4. Melancholy; hypochondriacal vapours.
Spleen, vapours, and small-pox above them all.
Bodies chang'd to recent forms by spleen.

SPL

SPLE'NED, adj. [from splen.] Deprived of the spleen.
Animals spleened grow fatuous.
SPLE'NFUL, adj. [from splen and full.] Angry; peevish; fretful;
melancholy.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down;
Myself have calm'd their spleenful mutiny.
The cheerful soldiers, with new stores supply'd,
Now long to execute their spleenful will.
If you drink tea upon a promontory that overhangs the sea, the whistling of the wind is better music to contented minds than the opera to the spleenful.
SPLE'NLESS, adj. [from splen.] Kind; gentle; mild; Obsolete.
Mean time flew our ships, and freight we fetch'd
The fyren's ile; a spleenful wind to stretch
Her wings to waft us, and to urge our keel.
SPLE'NWORD, n. f. [from splen and word.] Miltwaite. A plant.
The leaves and fruit are like those of the fern; but the pinnule are eared at their basis.
Safe pass'd the gnome through this fantastick band,
A branch of healing spleenwort in his hand.
SPLE'NY, adj. [from splen.] Angry; peevish.
What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserv'ing; yet I know her for A spleeny Lutheran, and not wholome to Our cause.
SPLE'NDENT, adj. [from splendens, Latin.] Shining; glossy; having lustre.
They assign'd them names from some remarkable qualities, that is very observable in their red and splendens planets.
Metallick substances may, by reason of their great density, reflect all the light incident upon them, and so be as opaque and splendens as it's possible for any body to be.
SPLE'NDID, adj. [from splendens, Fr. splendidus, Latin.] Showy; magnificent; sumptuous; pompous.
Unacceptable, though in heav'n, our state
Of splendid vassalage.
Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And slept beneath the pompous colonade;
Fast by his side Pistratus lay spread,
In age his equal, on a splendid bed.
SPLE'NDIDLY, adv. [from splendens.] Magnificently; sumptuously; pompously.
Their condition, though it look splendidly, yet when you handle it on all sides, it will prick your fingers.
You will not admit you live splendidly, yet it cannot be denied but that you live neatly and elegantly.
How he lives and eats,
How largely gives, how splendidly he treats.
He, of the royal store
Splendidly frugal, fits whole nights devoid
Of sweet repose.
SPLE'NDOUR, n. f. [from splendens, French; splendens, Latin.]
1. Lustre; power of shining.
Splendour hath a degree of whiteness, especially if there be a little reperfection; for a looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple.
The dignity of gold above silver is not much; the splendour is alike, and more pleasing to some eyes, as in cloth of silver.
The first symptoms are a chilnel, a certain splendour or shining in the eyes, with a little moisture.
2. Magnificence; pomp.
Romulus, being to give laws to his new Romans, found no better way to procure an esteem and reverence to them, than by first procuring it to himself by splendour of habit and retinue.
Tis use alone that sanctifies expence,
And splendour borrows all her rays from sense.
SPLE'NETICK, adj. [from splenetique, French.] Troubled with the spleen; fretful; peevish.
Horace purged himself from these splenetick reflections in odes and epodes, before he undertook his satyrs.
This daughter silently lowers, 'till she steals a kind look at you, a third is exactly well behaved, and a fourth a splenetick.
You humour me when I am sick;
Why not when I am splenetick?
SPLE'NETICK, adj. [from splenetique, French; splen, Latin.] Belonging to the spleen.
Suppose the spleen obstructed in its lower parts and splenetick anch, a potent heat causeth the organism to boil.
The splenetick vein hath divers cells opening into it near its extremities in human bodies; but in quadrupeds the cells open into the trunks of the splenetick veins.
SPLE'NISH, adj. [from splen.] Fretful; peevish.
Yourself you must engage,
Somewhat to cool your spleny rage,
Your grievous thirst, and to allwage,
That first you drink this liquor.

SPL'ENTIVE, adj. [from splen.] Hot; fiery; passionate. Not in use.
Take thy fingers from my throat;
For though I am not splentive and rash,
Yet I have in me something dangerous.
SPL'ENT, n. f. [from splen.] A callosous hard substance, or an insensible swelling, which breeds on or adheres to the shank-bone, and when it grows big spoils the shape of the leg. When there is but one, it is called a single splint; but when there is another opposite to it on the outside of the shank-bone, it is called a pegged or pinned splint.
To SPLICE, v. a. [from splicen, Dutch; splice, Latin.] To join the two ends of a rope without a knot.
SPLINT, n. f. [from splinter, Dutch.] A thin piece of wood or other matter used by chirurgeons to hold the bone newly set in its place.
The ancients, after the seventh day, used splinters, which not only kept the members steady, but straight; and of these some are made of tin, others of scabbard and wood, sowed up in linnen cloths.
To SPLINT, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To secure by splints.
This broken joint intreat her to splinter, and this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.
2. To shiver; to break into fragments.
SPLINTER, n. f. [from splinter, Dutch.]
1. A fragment of any thing broken with violence.
He was slain upon a course at tilt, one of the splinters of Montgomery's staff going in at his bever.
Amidst whole heaps of spices lights a ball,
And now their odours arm'd against them flie;
Some preciously by shattered porcelain fall,
And some by aromatic splinters die.
2. A thin piece of wood.
A plain Indian farr, used by the meaner sort, made of the small stringy parts of roots, spread out in a round flat form, and so bound together with a splinter hoops, and strengthened with small bars on both sides.
To SPLINTER, v. n. [from the noun.] To be broken into fragments.
To SPLIT, v. a. [from spalten, Dutch.]
1. To cleave; to rive; to divide longitudinally in two.
Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou *split*st thine own.
Mine own tongue splits what it speaks,
That self-hand
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Split the heart.
Wer't thou serv'd up two in one dish, the rather
To split thy fire into a double father?
When cold Winter splits the rocks in twain,
He strips the bearsfoot of its leafy growth.
A hull so hard, that it is almost as easy to split a helmet of iron as to make a fracture in it.
This effort is in some earthquakes so vehement, that it splits and tears the earth, making cracks or chafms in it some miles.
2. To divide; to part.
Their logic has appeared the mere art of wrangling, and their metaphysics the skill of splitting an hair, of distinguishing without a difference.
One and the same ray is by refraction disturbed, shattered, diluted, and splits, and spread into many diverging rays.
He instances Luther's sensuality and disobedience; two crimes which he has dealt with, and to make the more solemn threw he splits 'em into twenty.
Oh, would it please the gods to split
Thy beauty, fize, and years, and wit,
No age could furnish out a pair
Of nymphs so graceful, wife, and fair;
With half the lustre of your eyes,
With half your wit, your years, and fize.
3. To dash and break on a rock.
God's desertion, as a full and violent wind, drives him in an instant, not to the harbour, but on the rock where he will be irrecoverably split.
Those who live by shores, with joy behold
Some wealthy vessel split or stranded high;
And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold,
And seek the tempests which the others fly.
4. To divide; to break into discord.
In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power splits their councils, and smites their most sacred policies with frustration and a curse.
5. To burst in sunder; to crack; to suffer disruption.
A huge vessel of exceeding hard marble splits asunder by con-gealed water.
What is't to me,
Who never fall on her unfaithful sea,

If storms arise and clouds grow black,
If the mast splits, and threaten wrack?
The road that to the lungs this store transmits,
Into unnumber'd narrow channels splits.
Each had a gravity would make you split,
And shook his head at M—y as a wit.
2. To be broken against rocks.
After our ship did split,
When you, and the poor number sav'd with you,
Hung on our driving boat.
These are the rocks on which the sanguine tribe of lovers daily splits, and on which the politician, the alchymist, and projector are cast away.
The seamen spied a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split.
SPLITTER, n. f. [from split.] One who splits.
How should we rejoice, if, like Judas the first,
Those splitters of parsons in sunder should burst!
SPLUTTER, n. f. Bustle; tumult. A low word.
To SPOIL, v. a. [from spolio, Latin; spolier, French.]
1. To rob; to take away by force.
Ye took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourself that ye have in heaven an enduring substance.
This mount
With all his verdure spoils d, and trees adrift.
2. To plunder; to strip of goods.
Yielding themselves upon the Turks faith, for the safeguard of their liberty and goods, they were most injuriously spoiled of all that they had.
Thou shalt not gain what I deny to yield,
Nor reap the harvest, though thou spoilst the field.
My sons their old unhappy fire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes.
3. To corrupt; to mar; to make useless. [This is properly spoil, ppilian, Saxon.]
Beware lest any man spoil you, through philosophy and vain deceit.
Spiritual pride spoils many graces.
To SPOIL, v. n.
1. To practice robbery or plunder.
England was infested with robbers and outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used often to break forth to rob and spoil.
They which hate us spoil for themselves.
2. To grow useless; to be corrupted.
He that gathered a hundred bushels of acorns, or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else he robbed others.
1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder; pillage; booty.
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name.
Where the cleaver chops the helter's spoil,
Thy breathing nostril hold.
2. The act of robbery; robbery; waste.
The man that hath not muck in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.
Go and speed!
Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain.
3. Corruption; cause of corruption.
Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.
4. The slough; the cast-off skin of a serpent.
Snakes, the rather for the casting of their spoil, live till they be old.
SPOILER, n. f. [from spoil.]
1. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.
Such ruin of her manners Rome
Doth suffer now, as she's become Both her own spoiler and own prey.
Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places.
Came you, then, here, thus far, thro' waves, to conquer,
To waste, to plunder, out of meek compassion?
Is it humanity that prompts you on?
Happy for us, and happy for you spoilers,
Had your humanity ne'er reach'd out world!
2. One who mars or corrupts any thing.
SPOILFUL, adj. [from spoil and full.] Wasteful; rapacious.
Having oft in battle vanquished
Thole spoilful Picts, and swarming Easterlings,
Long time in peace his realm established.
SPOKE, n. f. [from spaca, Saxon; spoke, German.] The bar of a wheel that passes from the nave to the felly.
All you gods,
In general synod take away her power:
Break all the spokes and fellyes of her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n.

blood come away. L'Estrange.

TO SPONGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To blot; to wipe away
as with a sponge.
Except between the words of translation and the mind of Scripture itself there be contradiction, very little difference should not seem an intolerable blemish necessarily to be sponged out. Hooker.

TO SPONGE. v. n. To suck in as a sponge; to gain by mean arts.
The ant lives upon her own honesty; whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smell-fest, that sponges upon other people's trenchers. L'Estrange.

Here went the dean, when he's to seek,
To sponge a breakfast once a week. Swift.
SPONGER. n. f. [from sponge.] One who hangs for a maintenance on others.

A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-fies and spongers.
SPONGINESS. n. f. [from spongy.] Softness and fulness of cavities like a sponge.

The lungs are exposed to receive all the droppings from the brain: a very fit cistern, because of their sponginess. Harvey.
SPONGIOUS. adj. [spongius, French; from sponge.] Full of small cavities like a sponge.

All thick bones are hollow or spongious, and contain an elegant substance in little vessels, which by the heat of the body is exhaled through these bones to supply their fibres. Chey.
SPONGY. adj. [from spongy.]

1. Soft and full of small interstitial holes.
The lungs are the most spongy part of the body, and therefore able to contract and dilate itself. Bacon's Nat. History.
A spongy excrecence growth upon the roots of the lae-tree, and upon cedar, very white, light, and friable, called agarick. Bacon's Natural History.

The body of the tree being very spongy within, though hard without, they easily contrive into canoes. More.

Into earth's spongy veins the ocean sinks,
Those rivers to replenish which he drinks. Denham.

Return, unhappy swain!
The spongy clouds are fill'd with gath'ring rain. Dryden.

Her bones are all very spongy, and more remarkably those of a wild bird, which flies much, and long together. Grew.

2. Wet; drenched; soaked; full like a sponge.
When their drenched natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? What not put upon His spongy officer, who shall bear the guilt. Shakespeare.

SPO'NSOR. n. f. [Latin.] A surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.

In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are called sponsors or sureties for their education in the true Christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The sponsor ought to be of the same station with the person to whom he becomes surety.

SPONTANEITY. n. f. [spontaneitas, school Lat. spontaneus, It.
from spontaneus.] Voluntaryness; willingness; accord un-compelled.

Necessity and spontaneity may sometimes meet together, so may spontaneity and liberty; but real necessity and true liberty can never.

Strict necessity they simple call;
It binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity not choice are done.

SPONTANEOUS. adj. [spontaneus, French; from sponte, Lat.]
Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.

Many analog motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous; I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical.

They now came forth
Spontaneous; for within them spirit mov'd
Attendant on their lord.

While John for nine-pins does declare,
And Roger loves to pitch the bar,
Both legs and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove.

Begin with sense, of ev'ry art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance.

Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow.
SPONTANEOUSLY. adv. [from spontaneous.] Voluntarily;
of its own accord.

This would be as impossible as that the lead of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it.

Why turns spontaneously acid, and the curd into cheese as hard as a stone.

SPONTANEOUSNESS. n. f. [from spontaneous.] Voluntaryness;
freedom of will; accord unforced.

The faculties and instincts of brutes, the spontaneousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable without supposing some active determinate power connected to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter. Hale's Origin of Manhood.

SPOWL. n. f. [spuhl, German; spohl, Dutch.] A small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; or a piece of wood turned in that form to wind yarn upon; a quill.

My heaving wishes help to fill the sail. Dryden.

SPOON. n. f. [spoon, Dutch; spone, Danish; spoon, Islandick.]
A concave vessel with a handle, used in eating liquids.

Wouldst thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean.

Enough to fluff such a villain up.
This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no longer spoon.

Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon. Pope.

SPOONBILL. n. f. [spoon and bill.] A bird.
The shoveller, or spoonbill; the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel; but not concave like a spoon, but perfectly flat. Grew's Anatomy.

Ducks and geese have such long broad bills, to quaffer in water and mud; to which we may reckon the bill of the spoonbill. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SPOONFUL. n. f. [spoon and full.]

1. As much as is generally taken at once in a spoon. A medical spoonful is half an ounce.

Prescribe him, before he do the receipt, that he take such a pill, or a spoonful of liquor.

2. Any small quantity of liquid.
Surely the choice and measure of the materials of which the whole body is composed, and what we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as of what we take feldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls.

SPOONMEAT. n. f. [spoon and meat.] Liquid food; nourishment taken with a spoon.

We prescribed a slender diet, allowing only spoonmeat. Wile.

1. Play; diversion; game; frolick and tumultuous merriment.
Her sports were such as carried riches of knowledge upon the stream of delight.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest.

When their hearts were merry, they said, call for Samson, that he may make us sport; and they called for him, and he made them sport.

As a mad-man who casteth fire-brands, arrows and death;
so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and faith, am not
I in sport?

The discourse of fools is irksome, and their sport is in the wantonnels of sin.

2. Mock; contemptuous mirth.
They had his mellengers in derision and made a sport of his prophesies.

To make sport with his word, and to endeavour to render it ridiculous, by turning that holy book into rallery, is a direct affront to God.

3. That with which one plays.
Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey
Of wrecking whirlwinds.

Commit not thy prophetick mind
To fitting leaves, the sport of every wind,
Lest they disperse in air.

4. Play; idle gingle.
An author who should introduce such a sport of words upon our stage, would meet with small applause.

5. Diversion of the field, as of fowling, hunting, fishing.
Now for our mountain sport, up to yon hill,
Your legs are young.

The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, and the sports of the field, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer, between Richmond and Hampton court.

TO SPORT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To divert; to make merry.

The poor man wept and bled, cried and prayed, while they sported themselves in his pain, and delighted in his prayers as the argument of their victory.

With that she's big with.
Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isa. lvii. 4.

What pretty stories there are for a man of his seriousness to sport himself withal!

Let such writers go on at their dearest peril, and sport themselves in their own deceivings.

2. To represent by any kind of play.
Now sporting on thy lyre the love of youth,
Now virtuous age and venerable truth;
Expressing justly Sappho's wanton art
Of odes, and Pindar's more majestic part.

TO SPORT. v. n.
1. To play; to frolick; to game; to wanton.

They sporting with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold. Milton.

That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky mullets? Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

While thus the constant pair alternate said,
Joyful above them and around them play'd
Angels and sportive loves, a numerous crowd,
Smiling they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd. Prior.

We must not hope wholly to change their original tempers, nor make the gay, pensive and grave; nor the melancholy, sportive, without spoiling them.

No wonder savages or subjects slain,
Were equal crimes in a despotick reign;
Both doom'd alike for sportive tyrants bled,
But subjects starv'd while savages were fed.

SPOR'TIVENESS. n. f. [from sportive.] Gaiety; play; wantonness.

Shall I conclude her to be simple, that has her time to begin, or refuse sportiveness as freely as I have? Walton's Angler.

SPOR'TSMAN. n. f. [sport and man.] One who pursues the recreations of the field.

Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for

Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex.

4. A small extent of place.
That spot to which I point is paradise,
Adam's abode, those lofty shades his bow'r.

He, who with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it.

About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the stem of these vapours.

Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers.

He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians.

5. Any particular place.
I would be busy in the world, and learn,
Not like a coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
So the my prey becomes ev'n here.

Here Adrian fell: upon that fatal spot
Our brother died.

He bought a field where he had spread his tent. Gen. xxxiii.
Ripah spread sackcloth for her upon the rock. 2 Sam. xxi.
Make the trees more tall, more spread, and more hasty than they use to be. Bacon's Natural History.

Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarrhith. Jer. x.
2. To cover by extension.
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace.
And an unflattering paleness spread her face. Grayville.

3. To cover over.
The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith
spreadeth it over with gold. Isa. xl. 19.
4. To stretch; to extend.
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair. Shakespeare.

He arose from kneeling, with his hands spread up to heaven, and he blessed the congregation. 1 Kings, viii. 54.
The flately trees fall spread their branches. Milton.
Deep in his side Piffritatus lay spread. Pope.

In age his equal, on a splendid bed.
To publish; to divulge; to disseminate.
5. To publish; to divulge; to disseminate.
They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country. Matth. ix. 31.

6. To emit as effluvia or emanations; to diffuse.
Their course thro' thickest constellations held,
They spread their bane. Milton.
TO SPREAD. v. n. To extend or expand itself.
Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle? Job xxxvi. 29.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness and ambitious designs.
Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall.
Great Pan, who want to chafe the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there. Addison's Cato.

The valley opened at the farther end spreading forth into an immense ocean. Addison.
SPREAD. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Extent; compass.
I have got a fine spread of improvable lands, and am already ploughing up some, fencing others. Addison.

2. Expansion of parts.
No flower hath that spread of the woodbind.
SPREADER. n. s. [from spread.]
1. One that spreads.

By conforming ourselves we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from Papists by our conformity with them in ceremonies. Hooker.
2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.
If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spread- er of false news. Swift.

SPRENT. part. [from sprent, to sprinkle, sprenzen, sprenan, Saxon; sprenzen, Dutch.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.
O lips, that kiss'd that hand, with my tears sprent. Sidney.

SPRIG. n. s. [from spring, Welsh; spring, Latin.] A small branch; a spray.
The substance is true ivy, after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some spring to keep. Bacon.
Our chilling climate hardly bears
A spring of bays in fifty years;
While ev'ry fool his claim alleges,
As if it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRIG. Chrystal. n. s.
In perpendicular fissures, chrystal is found in form of an hexaneular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point:
this is called by lapidaries spring or rock chrystal. Woodward.

SPRIG. adj. [from spring.] Full of small branches.
SPRIGHT. n. s. [Contraction of spirit, spiritus, Latin: it was anciently written spRite or spRite; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled spRite, and its derivatives spRitely, spRitful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.
She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words to wife do make their way,
To bear the message of her spRite. Spenser.

Legions of spRites, the which like little flies,
Fluttering about his ever damned head,
Await whereto their service he applies.
While with heav'nly charity the spoke,
A flaming blaze the silent shadows broke;
The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves received the guilty spRite. Dryden.

Of these am I who thy protection claim,
A watchful spRite. Pope.

SPR

2. Walking spirit; apparition.
The ideas of goblins and spRites have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.
O chastity, the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my spRites:
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly,
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow.
We had in use for sea fight short arrows called spRites, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon's Natural History.

TO SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a spRite. A ludicrous use.
I am spRighted with a fool. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
SPRIGHTFUL. adj. [from spRite and full.] Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.—
Spoke like a spRightly noble gentleman. Shakespeare.
Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:
My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating,
At sight of thee, and bound with spRightly joys. Ottway.

SPRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from spRightly.] Briskly; vigorously.
Norfolk, spRightly and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Shakep.

SPRIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from spRightly.] Liveliness; briskness;
vigour; gaiety; vivacity.
The soul is clogged when the acts in conjunction with a companion so heavy; but in dreams, observe with what a spRightliness and alacrity does the exert herself. Addison.

SPRIGHTLY. adj. [from spRite.] Gay; brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.
Produce the wine that makes us bold,
And spRightly wit and love inspires. Dryden.

When now the spRightly trumpet from afar,
Had given the signal of approaching war,
Each morn they wak'd me with a spRightly lay:
Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladsome day. Prior.

The spRightly Sylvia trips along the green;
She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.
TO SPRING. v. n. Preterite spring or sprang, anciently springen.
[from springen, Sax. springen, Dutch.]

1. To arise out of the ground and grow by vegetative power.
All blest secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakespeare.

To his mulick, plants and flowers
Ever spring, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth. Job xxxviii. 27.
Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that spring up and encreased. Mark iv. 8.

Tell me, in what happy fields
The thistle *spring*s, to which the lily yields? Pope.
2. To begin to grow.
That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not spring, are effects of providence. Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.
Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves;
and in the second year that which springeth of the same. 2 Kings.
Much more good of tin shall spring. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.
Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had spring like summer flies. Shakespeare.
Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
And each warm wish *spring*s mutual from the heart. Pope.

5. To arise; to appear.
When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judges.
To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is spring up. Matth. iv. 16.

6. To issue with effect or force.
Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn;
Oh spring to light: auspicious babe be born. Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors.
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued; and what stock he *spring*s of;
The noble house of Marcius. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Our Lord *spring*s out of Judea. Heb. vii. 14.

Shall, like the brethren *spring*s of dragon's teeth,
Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em, Ben. Johnson.
Heroes of old, by rapine, and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil;
Thus

Thus to their gods, each then ally'd his name,
This spring from Jove, and that from Titan came. Grave.
8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.
They found new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton.
Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, spring from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Do not blast my springing hopes
Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Rousse.
9. To grow; to thrive.
What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring:
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump.
Some strange commotion
Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; flait
Spring out into fast gait, then stops again. Shak. H. VIII.
I spring not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shaksp.
He called for a light, and spring in and fell before Paul. Acts.
When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again;
Then spring the forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.

Affraid to sleep;
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She spring from bed. Dryden.
Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Spring up to life, and fresh to second pain. Dryden.
See, aw'd by heaven, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;
And springing from her disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.
The mountain flag, that *spring*s
From height to height, and bounds along the plains,
Nor has a master to restrain his course;
That mountain flag would Vanoe rather be,
Than be a slave. Phillips's Briton.

11. To fly with elastic power.
A link of horfechair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the tick that *spring*s. Mortimer's Husbandry.

12. To rise from a covert.
My doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Otway.
A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.
Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. Gen. xxvi. 19.

Let the wide world his praises sing,
Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Reform.

14. To proceed as from a source.
Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure dreams of the springing day
With your dull influence: 'tis for you
To fit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Crafiatu.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.
Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Spring thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright:
The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.
The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd,
The fleet swift tilting o'er the furies flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appeared. Pope.

To SPRING. v. a.

1. To start; to rouse game.
Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose:
Now negligent of sport I lie;
And now, as other fawknars use,
I spring a miffrelis, swear, write, fight, and dye, Donn.
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie.

That spring the game you were to let,
Before you had time to draw the net. Hudibras.
A large cock-pheasant he spring in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison's Spectator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character,
I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.
See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm; he stops, he *spring*s the prey. Gay.

2. To produce to light.
The nurse, surpriz'd with fright,
Starts and leaves her bed, and *spring*s a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more:
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou mislead!
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind;
But drop from heaven, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy light,
And reason saw not, till faith spring the light. Dryden.
He that has such a burning zeal, and *spring*s such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Callan.

3. To make by starting a plank.
People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has spring a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time;
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.
Whether she spring a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overlet with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge a mine.
Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have spring divers others which did little execution. Taylor.
I spring a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison's Spectator.

5. To contrive as a sudden expedient; to offer unexpectedly.
The friends to the cause spring a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear 'till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the pretender. Swift.

6. To produce hastily.
7. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.
Unbecoming skill.

To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.

SPRING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants spring and vegetate; the vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick, plants and flowers
Ever spring, as fun and flowers
There had made a lasting Spring. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
The Spring viliteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.

Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson's Spring.

2. An elastic body; a body which when distorted has the power of restoring itself to its former state.
This may be better performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels. Wilkins's Math. Magis.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open. Mason's Mech. Exer.
He that was sharp sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastic motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastic force.
Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryd.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest, unless they be elastic, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.
The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring which is weakened, when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbutnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the *spring*s of life;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.

Nature is the same, and man is the same; has the same affections and passions, and the same *spring*s that give them motion. Rymor.

Our author shuns by vulgar *spring*s to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love. Pope's Priet. to Cato.
A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke:
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might, Dryden.
And to the neighbouring maple wing'd his flight.
With what a spring his furious soul broke loose! Add. Cato.
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground! Add. Cato.

6. A leak; a start of plank.
Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becom'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails,
Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.
Now stop thy *spring*s; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb. Shaksp. H. VI.
*Spring*s on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
When in th' effects the doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;
And seeing the branch, conceives the root below:
These things the views without the body's eyes. Davies.

He adds the running *spring*s; and standing lakes, Dryden.
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes,
Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates,
And flocks his hidden spring, and fears his neptuns fates. Dry.
He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of Winter. Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.
To that great spring, which doth great kingdoms move,
The sacred spring, whence right and honour streams;
Diffusing virtue, shielding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams. Davies.

I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know,
Though now I am, I was not always so:
Then that from which I was, must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.
He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.
About the spring of the day Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Sa. ix. 26.

10. Course; original.
The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. Swift.

SPRING. adv. [from the noun.] With elastic vigour,
Before the bull the pictur'd winged love,
With his young brother sport, light fluttering
Upon the waves, as each had been a dove;
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning teal about his head did move,
As in their fire new love both triumphing. Spenser.

SPRINGAL. n. f. A youth. Spenser.

SPRING. n. f. [from spring.] A gins; a noose which fastened to any elastic body catches by a spring or jerk.
As a woodcock to my own *spring*s, which,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Let goats for food their loaded udders lend;
But neither *spring*s, nets, nor snares employ. Dryden.
With hairy *spring*s we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

SPRING. n. f. [from spring.] One who rouses game.

SPRINGINESS. n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow, since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.

SPRINGHALT. n. f. [from spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones; one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the shavin
And springhalt reign'd among them. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

SPRINGTIDE. n. f. [from spring and tide.] Tide at the new moon;
high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again: Dryd. Tyrannick Love.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide. Grew's Cymol.

SPRING. n. f. [from spring.] A spring; an elastic noose.
Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plank-shoot served for spring to take them. Carew.

To SPRING. v. n. Misprinted, I suppose, for springle.

This is Timon's last,
Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries,
Washes it off, and springles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

SPRING. adj. [from spring.]

1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself.
Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein. Blackm. Creation.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbutnot.
If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley's Sermons.

2. [From spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grafs than corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To SPRINGLE. v. a. [from springle, Dutch.]

1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.
Take handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses springle it towards the heaven. Ex. ix. 8.

2. To scatter in drops.
Springle water of purifying upon them. Num. viii. 7.

3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dust by sprinkling.
Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts springled from an evil conscience. Heb.
Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume springled with gold. Milton.

The prince, with living water springled over
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door, Possess'd the porch. Dryden's En.

To SPRINGLE. v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.

The priest shall springle of the oil with his finger. Lev. xiv.
Baptism may well enough be performed by springling, or effusion of water. Swift's Parergon.

When dextrous damfels twirl the springling mop,
And cleanse the spatter'd sash, and scrub the stairs, Know Saturday appears. Gay's Trivia.

To SPRIT. v. a. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.] To throw out; to eject with force. Commonly spirt.
Toads sometimes exclude or spirt out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine. Brown.

To SPRIT. v. n. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.] To shoot; to germinate; to sprout.

SPRIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Shoot; sprout.
The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or spirt at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SPRITSAIL. n. f. [from spirt and sail.] The sail which belongs to the boltspit-mast. Dick.

Our men quitted themselves of the fire-ship, by cutting the spirt sail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wojman.

SPRITE. n. f. [Contracted from spirit.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent.

The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name. Pope.

SPRITFULLY. adv. [See SPRITFULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.

The Grecians springfully drew from the darts the corse,
And heart it, bearing it to feet. Chapman's Iliads.

SPRONG. The preterite of spring. Obsolete.

Not mistrusting, 'till these new curiosities spring up, that ever any man would think our labour herein mispent, or the time wastefully consumed. Hooker.

To SPROUT. v. n. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.]

1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.
Try whether these things in the springing do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hanged up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted. Bacon.

That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves. Bacon's Natural History.

We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whose ends, cut off, have notwithstanding sprouted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Old Baucis by old Philemon seen
Sprouting with sudden leaves of brightly green. Dryden.
Hence springing plants enrich the plain and wood:
For phsyck some, and some defend'd for food. Blackmore.

Envy'd Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top the proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars. Prior.

 Early ere the odorous breath of morn
 Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassel'd horn
 Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.
 To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray on the Creation.
 SPRUCE. adj. [Stimmer derives this word from prux, French;
 but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout; Caydon thinks yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from prux. In ancient books we find furniture of prux a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance.
 The tree
 That wraps that crystal in a wooden tomb,
 Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.
 Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
 Tho' some more spruce companion thou do't meet. Donne.
 Along the crisped shades and bow'rs
 Revels the spruce and jocund Spring;
 The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
 T' hither all their bounties bring. Milton.
 I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practised by many chymists. Boyle.
 He put his hand and heard in order,
 The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.
 He is so spruce, that he can never be genteel. Tatler.
 This Tim makes a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery: can't he go spruce and clean? Arbuthnot.
 To SPRUCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dress with affected neatness.
 SPRUCEBER. n. f. [from spruce, a kind of fir.] Beer tunc-tured with branches of fir.

 Tall Norway fir, their masts in battle spent,
 And English oaks, spring leaks, and planks, restore. Dryd.
 Now from beneath Maleas' airy height,
 Aloft the spring, and steer'd to Thebes her flight. Pope.
 Who spring from kings shall know less joy than I. Pope.
 SPRUNT. n. f. Any thing that is short and will not easily bend.
 SPUD. n. f. A short knife.
 My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt,
 Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt:
 My spud these nettles from the stones can part,
 No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart. Swift.
 SPULLERS of Yarn. n. f. Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. Ditt.
 SPUME. n. f. [from spuma, Latin.] Foam; froth.
 Materials dark and crude,
 Of spirituous and fiery spumes, till touch'd
 With heaven's rays, and temper'd, they shoot forth
 So beauteous, op'ning to the ambient light. Milton.
 Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy parts dissolved by the congealable mixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 To SPUME. v. n. [from spuma, Latin.] To foam; to froth.
 SPUMOUS. adj. [from spuma, Latin; from the noun.] Frothy;
 SPUMY. adj. foamy.
 The cause is the putrefaction of the body by unnatural heat:
 the putrifying parts suffer a turgescence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend into the surface of the water. Brown.
 Not with more madnets, rolling from afar,
 The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war;
 And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
 March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dryden.
 The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbuthnot.
 SPURN. The preterite and part. pass. of spurn.
 The nymph now spurns, nor dress'd with artful pride;
 Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was ty'd. Addison.
 SPURGE. n. f. [from spargere, Latin.] A sponge. See SPONGE.
 When he needs what you have glean'd, it is but squeezing

- of the spurge and the resistance of the air, the spurge did themechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion.
 To SPURGE. v. n. [Rather To spurge.] To hang on others for maintenance.
 This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sparging
 while you are young. Swift to Gay.
 SPURGEHOUSE. n. f. [from spurge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.
 A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sparging-house. Sw.
 SPURGEY. adj. [from spurge.] A sponge.
 1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.
 Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
 And into cloth of spurgey softness made,
 Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
 To ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.
 2. Wet; moist; watery.
 There is no lady of more softer bowels,
 More spurgey to suck in the fence of fear. Shakspeare.
 I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
 From the spurgey South to this part of the West,
 There vanish'd in the fun-beams. Shakspeare. Cymbeline.
 3. Drunken; wet with liquor.
 What cannot we put upon
 His spurgey officers! Shakspeare.
 SPURK. n. f. Rotten wood; touchwood. See SPOOK.
 To make white powder, the best way is by the powder of rotten willows: spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it rustier. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 SPUR. n. f. [from spura, Sax. spore, Danish, Swedish, and Dutch;
espora, French.]
 1. A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.
 He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philoclea's picture. Sidney.
 Whether the body politic be
 A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
 Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
 He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur. Shakspeare.
 He presently felt spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company. Kneller's History of the Turin.
 Was I for this entitled, fir,
 And girt with rusty sword and spur,
 For fame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.
 2. Incitement; instigation.
 Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh into motion, how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action, unless it have also the like spur? Huet.
 What need we any spur, but our own cause,
 To prick us to redress? Shakspeare. Julius Caesar.
 His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of providence of the future, to make his people more and more happy.
 Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts; and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are propoled. Dryden.
 The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is uneasiness. Locke.
 The former may be a spur to the latter, 'till age makes him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Ogleth.
 3. A stimulus; a prick; any thing that galls and teases.
 Grief and patience, rooted in him both,
 Mingle their spurs together. Shakspeare. Cymbeline.
 4. The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.
 Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth: as for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.
 Animals have natural weapons to defend and offend; some talons, some claws, some spurs and beaks. Ray.
 5. Any thing standing out; a snag.
 The strong bad's promontory
 Have I made shake, and pluckt up by the spurs. Shakspeare.
 The pine and cedar.
 To SPUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.
 My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of starting fits, spurred him up to the very side of the coach. Addison.
 Your father, when he mounted,
 Rein'd 'em in strongly, and he spur'd 'd them hard. Dryden.
 Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is carested? But when you brow-beat and maul them, you make them men; for though they have no natural mettle, yet, if they are spurred and kicked, they will mend their pace. Collier on Pride.
 2. To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.
 Lovers break not hours.
 Unless it be to come before their time: Shakspeare.
 So much they spur their expedition.
 Let the awe he has got upon their minds be so tempered with the marks of good-will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.
 3. To

3. To drive by force.
 Love will not be spurr'd to what it loaths. Shakspeare.
 To SPUR. v. n.
 1. To travel with great expedition.
 With backward bows the Parthians shall be there,
 And spurring from the fight, confess their fear: Dryden.
 A double wreath shall crown our brows.
 2. To press forward.
 Alcanius took th' alarm, while yet he led,
 And spurring on, his equals soon o'erspa'd. Dryden.
 Some bold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, gain themselves. Grew.
 SPURGALLED. adj. [from spur and gall.] Hurt with the spur.
 I was not made a horse,
 And yet I bear a burthen like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tir'd, by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakspeare.
 What! shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
 Or each new pension'd hyacinth, pretend
 To break my windows, if I treat a friend. Pope.
 SPURGE. n. f. [from spargere, French; spurge, Dutch, from spargo, Latin.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants. Skimmer.
 The flower consists of one leaf, of the globous bell shape, cut into several moon-shaped segments, and encompassed by two little leaves, which seem to perform the office of a flower-cup; the point is for the most part triangular, which rises from the bottom of the flower, and becomes a fruit of the same shape, divided into three cells, each containing an oblong seed. Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice.
 There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. The first sort, called broad-leaved spurge, is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cata-putia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts; but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustick. Miller.
 The leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit; is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 SPURGE LAUREL, or MEASURE. n. f. [from spurge, Latin.] A plant.
 The characters are: the flower consists of one leaf; is, for the most part, funnel-shaped, and cut into four segments; from whose centre rises the point, which afterward becomes an oval fruit, which is in some full of juice, but in others is dry. In each is contained one oblong seed. It is a rough purge. Miller.
 SPURIOUS. adj. [from spurius, Latin.]
 1. Not genuine; counterfeit; adulterine.
 The coin that shows the first is generally rejected as spurious, nor is the other esteemed more authentic by the present Roman medallists. Addison on Italy.
 If any thing else has been printed, in which we really had any hand, it is loaded with spurious additions. Swift.
 2. Not legitimate; bastard.
 Your Scipio's, Caesar's, Pompey's, and your Cato's,
 These gods on earth, are all the spurious brood
 Of violated maidens. Addison's Cato.
 SPURRING. n. f. [from spargere, French.] A small sea-fish.
 All-faints, do lay for porke and fowls,
 For sprats and spurrings for your house. Tupper.
 To SPURN. v. a. [from spurn, Saxon.]
 1. To kick; to strike or drive with the foot.
 They suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
 And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shakspeare. Henry VI.
 Say my request's unjust,
 And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
 Thou art not honest. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
 You that did void your rheum upon my beard,
 And foot me as you spurn a stranger cur
 Over your threshold. Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.
 He in the surging smoke
 Uplifted spurn'd the ground. Milton.
 So was I forc'd
 To do a sovereign justice to myself,
 And spurn thee from my presence. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 Then will I draw up my legs, and spurn her from me with my foot. Addison's Spectator.
 A milk-white bull shall at your altars stand,
 That threatens a fight, and spurns the rising sand. Pope.
 When Athens sinks by fates unjust,
 When wild barbarians spurn her dust.
 Now they, who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
 Employ their pains to spurn some others down. Pope.
 2. To reject; to scorn; to put away with contempt; to disdain.
 In wisdom I should ask your name;
 But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
 What fate and nicely I might well delay,
 By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shakspeare.
 3. To treat with contempt.
 Domesticicks will pay a more cheerful service, when they find themselves not spurn'd, because fortune has laid them at their masters feet. Locke.

SPY

- To SPURN. v. n.
 1. To make contemptuous opposition; to make insolent resistance.
 A son to blunt the sword
 That guards the peace and safety of your person;
 Nay more, to spurn at your most royal image. Shakspeare.
 I, Pandulph, do religiously demand
 Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
 So wilfully do'st spurn? Shakspeare. King John.
 Instruct me why
 Vanoe should spurn against our rule; and flie:
 The tributary provinces to war. Philips's Briton.
 2. To toss up the heels; to kick or struggle.
 The drunken chairman in the kennel spurns. Gay.
 The glasses shatters, and his charge o'erturns. Gay.
 SPURN. n. f. [from the verb.] Kick; insolent and contemptuous treatment.
 The insolence of office, and the spurns that come
 That patient merit of th' unworthy takes. Shakspeare. Hamlet.
 SPURNEY. n. f. A plant.
 SPURNER. n. f. [from spurn.] One who uses spurs.
 SPURNER. n. f. [from spurn.] One who makes spurs.
 SPURRY. n. f. [from spuria, Latin.] A plant.
Spurry feed is sown in the low countries in Summer, the first time in May, that it may flower in June and July; and in August the feed is ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 To SPURT. v. n. [See To SPURT.] To fly out with a quick stream.
 If from a puncture of a lancet, the manner of the spurring out of the blood will shew it. Wiseman's Surgery.
 SPURWAY. n. f. [from spur and way.] A horseway; a bridle-road;
 distinct from a road for carriages.
 SPURATION. n. f. [from spuria, Latin.] The act of spitting.
 A moist consumption receives its nomenclature from a moist spuration, or expectoration: a dry one is known by its dry cough. Harvey on Consumption.
 To SPURTTER. v. n. [from spuria, Latin.]
 1. To emit moisture in small flying drops.
 If a manly drop or two fall down,
 It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood,
 That, spurring in the flame, works outward into tears. Dry.
 2. To fly out in small particles with some noise.
 The nightly virgin, while her wheel the plies,
 Foresees the forms impending in the skies,
 When sparkling lamps their spurring light advance,
 And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.
 3. To speak hastily and obscurely, as with the mouth full; to throw out the spittle by hasty speech.
 A pinking owl fat sputtering at the sun, and asked him what he meant to stand staring her in the eyes. L'Estrange.
 They could neither of them speak their rage; and so fell a sputtering at one another, like two roasting apples. Congreve.
 Though he sputter through a session,
 It never makes the least impression.
 What'er he speaks for madnets goes. Swift.
 To SPUTTER. v. a. To throw out with noise and hectation.
 Thou do'st with lies the throne invade,
 Obtending heav'n for what'er ills befall;
 And sputtering under specious names thy gall. Dryden.
 In the midst of careles, and without the least pretended incitement, to sputter out the basest accusations. Swift.
 SPUTTERER. n. f. [from sputter.] One that sputters.
 SPY. n. f. [from spies, Welsh; espion, French; spie, Dutch; speculator, Latin.] It is observed by a German, that spy has been in all ages a word by which the eye, or office of the eye, has been expressed: thus the Arimaspions of old, fabled to have but one eye, were so called from ari, which, among the nations of Caucasus, still signifies one, and spi, which has been received from the old Asiatick languages for an eye, sight, or one that sees. One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others;
 one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.
 We'll hear poor rogues
 Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too;
 And take upon's the mystery of things,
 As if we were God's spies. Shakspeare. King Lear.
Spies of the Volcians
 Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheel
 Three or four miles about. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
 Every corner was possessed by diligent spies upon their master and mistress. Clarendon.
 I come no spies
 With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
 The secrets of your realm. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Such command we had,
 To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
 Or enemy, while God was in his work. Milton.
 Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
 All they lubdue become their spies:
 Secrets, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair. Waller.

- O'er my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes.
These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less.
Those who attend on their state, are to many spies placed upon them: by the publick to observe them nearly.
To SPY. v. a. [See SPY. n. f.]
1. To discover by the eye at a distance, or in a state of concealment; to espy.
Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;
If it could speak as well as spies,
This were the worst that it could say,
That being well I fain would stay.
As tiger spies two gentle fawns.
A countryman spied a snake under a hedge; half frozen to death.
My brother Guyomar, methinks, I spy:
Haste in his steps, and wonder in his eye.
One in reading skip'd over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration.
2. To discover by close examination.
Let a lawyer tell he has spied some defect in an entail, how solicitous are they to repair that error.
3. To search or discover by artifice.
Moses sent to spy out Jaazer, and took the villages. Numb.
To SPY. v. n. To search narrowly.
It is my nature's plague
To spy into abuse; and oft my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not.
SPYBOAT. n. f. [spy and boat.] A boat sent out for intelligence.
Giving the colour of the sea to their spyboats to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti.
SQUAB. adj. [I know not whence derived.]
1. Unfeathered; newly hatched.
Why must old pigeons, and they stale, be dreft,
When there's so many squab ones in the nest.
2. Fat; thick and stout; awkwardly bulky.
The new ally goes round,
Nor the squab daughter nor the wife were nice,
Each health the youths began, Sim plied it twice better.
SQUAB. v. f. A kind of sofa or couch; a stuffed cushion.
On her large squab you find her spread,
Like a fat corpse upon a bed.
SQUAB. adv. With a heavy sudden fall; plump and flat. A low word.
The eagle took the tortoise up into the air, and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock, that dashed him to pieces.
SQUABBLE. n. f. [squab, and pie.] A pie made of many ingredients.
Cornwall squabbles, and Devon whitepot brings,
And Leicester beans and bacon, food of kings.
To SQUAB. v. n. To fall down plump or flat; to squelch or squash.
SQUABBISH. adj. [from squab.] Thick; heavy; fleshy.
Diet renders them of a squabbish or lardy habit of body.
To SQUABBLE. v. n. [kiabla, Swedish.] To quarrel; to debate peevishly; to wrangle; to fight.
Drunk? and speak parrot? and squabble? swagger! oh, thou invincible spirit of wine!
I thought it not improper in a squabbling and contentious age, to detect the vanity of confiding ignorance.
If there must be disputes, is not squabbling less inconvenient than murder?
The sense of these propositions is very plain, though logicians might squabble a whole day, whether they should rank them under negative or affirmative.
SQUABBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A low brawl; a petty quarrel.
In popular factions, pragmatick fools commonly begin the squabbles, and crafty knaves reap the benefit.
A man whose personal courage is suspected, is not to drive squabbles before him; but may be allowed the merit of some squabble, or throwing a bottle at his neighbour's head.
SQUABBLER. n. f. [from squabble.] A quarrelsome fellow; a brawler.
SQUADRON. n. f. [squadron, Fr. squadron, Italian, from quadatus, Latin.]
1. A body of men drawn up square.
Those half rounding guards
Just met, and closing stood in squadron join'd.
2. A part of an army; a troop.
Nothing the Moors were more afraid of, than in a set battle to fight with squadrons coming orderly on.
Then beauteous Ays, with Julius bred,
Of equal age, the second squadron led.
3. Part of a fleet, a certain number of ships.
Rome could not maintain its dominion over so many provinces, without squadrons ready equipt.
SQUADRONED. adj. [from squadron.] Formed into squadrons.
They gladly thither haste; and by a choir
Of squadron'd angels hear his carol sung.

- SQUALID. adj. [squalidus, Latin.] Foul; nasty; filthy.
A doleful case deserves a doleful song,
Without vain art or curious compliments,
And squalid fortune into baseness flowing,
Dost scorn the pride of wonted ornaments.
Uncomb'd his locks, and squalid his attire,
Unlike the trim of love and gay desire.
All these Cocyus bounds with squalid reeds,
With muddy ditches and with deadly weeds.
To SQUAL. v. n. [squalo, Swedish.] To stream out as a child or woman frightened.
In my neighbourhood, a very pretty prattling shoulder of veal squalls out at the sight of a knife.
I put five into my coat pocket, and as to the sixth I made a countenance as if I would eat him alive. The poor man squaled terribly.
Cornelius funk back on a chair; the guests stood astonished; the infant squaled.
SQUAL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Loud scream.
There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The throat thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall.
2. Sudden gust of wind.
SQUALOR. n. f. [from squal.] Scream; one that screams.
SQUALOR. n. f. [Latin.] Coarseness; nastiness; want of cleanliness and neatness.
Take heed that their new flowers and sweetness do not as much corrupt as the others dryness and squalor.
What can filthy poverty give else, but beggary, followne nastiness, squalor, ugliness, hunger, and thirst?
SQUALID. adj. [from squal.] Windy; gusty. A sailor's word.
SQUALID. adj. [squalidus, Latin.] Scaly; covered with scales.
The sea was replenish'd with fish, of the cartilaginous and squamous, as of the testaceous and crustaceous kinds.
Those galls and balls are produced, in the gems of oak, which may be called squamous oak cones.
To SQUANDER. v. a. [verschwenden, Teutonic.]
1. To scatter lavishly; to spend profusely; to throw away in idle prodigality.
We squander away some part of our fortune at play.
They often squander'd, but they never gave.
Never take a favourite waiting maid, to intimate how great a fortune you brought, and how little you are allowed to squander.
Then, in plain prose, were made two sorts of men.
To squander some, and some to hide agen.
True friends would rather see such thoughts as they communicate only to one another, than what they squander about to all the world.
How uncertain it is, whether the years we propose to ourselves shall be indulged to us, uncertain whether we shall have power or even inclination to improve them better than those we now squander away.
2. To scatter; to dissipate; to disperse.
He hath an argosie bound to Tripoli, another to the Indies, and other ventures he hath squandered abroad.
The troops we squander'd first, again appear.
From several quarters, and enclose the rear.
He is a successful warrior.
And has the soldiers hearts: upon the skirts
Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies.
SQUANDERER. n. f. [from squander.] A spendthrift; a prodigal; a waster; a lavisher.
Plenty in their own keeping, teaches them from the beginning, to be squanderers and wasters.
SQUARE. adj. [quadratus, Latin.]
1. Cornered; having right angles.
All the doors and posts were square, with the windows.
Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round.
2. Forming a right angle.
This instrument is for striking lines square to other lines or straight sides, and try the squareness of their work.
3. Cornered; having angles of whatever content; as three square, five square.
Catching up in haste his three square shield,
And thinning helmet, soon him buckled to the field.
The clavicle is a crooked bone, in the figure of an S, one end of which being thicker and almost three squares is inserted into the first bone of the sternon.
4. Parallel; exactly suitable.
She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.
5. Strong; stout; well set. As, a square man.
6. Equal; exact; honest; fair. As, square dealing.
For those that were, it is not square to take
On those that are, revenge; crimes, like to hands,
Are not inherited.
7. [In geometry.] Square root of any number is that which, multiplied by it self, produces the square, as 4 is the square root of 16; because  $4 \times 4 = 16$ ; and likewise 6 the square root of 36, as  $6 \times 6 = 36$ .

SQUARE.

- SQUARE. n. f. [quadratus, Latin.]
1. A figure with right angles and equal sides.
Then did a sharped spire of diamond bright,
Ten feet each way in square appear to me,
Justly proportion'd up unto his height,
So far as archer might his level see.
Rais'd of graily turf their table was;
And on her ample square from side to side
All Autumn pil'd.
2. An area of four sides, with houses on each side.
The statue of Alexander VII. stands in the large square of the town.
3. Content of an angle.
In rectangle triangles the square which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides, containing the right angle.
4. A rule or instrument by which workmen measure or form their angles.
5. Rule; regularity; exact proportion; justness of workmanship or conduct.
In St. Paul's time the integrity of Rome was famous: Corinth many ways reproved: they of Galatia much more out of square.
The whole ordinance of that government was at first evil plotted, and through other overights came more out of square, to that disorder which it is now come unto.
I have not kept my square, but that to come Shall all be done by th' rule.
Nothing so much fetters this art of influence out of square and rule as education.
6. Squadron; troops formed square.
He alone
Dealt on lieutenantantry, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war.
Our superfluous lacqueys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our square of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a biding foe.
7. A square number is when another call'd its root can be exactly found, which multiplied by itself produces the square. The following example is not accurate.
Advance thy golden mountains to the skies,
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise;
Add one round hundred, and if that's not fair,
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square.
8. Quaternion; number four.
I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys
Which the most precious square of sense possesses,
And find I am alone felicitate
In your love.
9. Level; equality.
Men should sort themselves with their equals; for a rich man that converses upon the square with a poor man, shall certainly undo him.
We live not on the square with such as these,
Such are our betters who can better please.
10. Quartile; the astrological situation of planets, distant ninety degrees from each other.
To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine and opposite
Of noxious efficacy.
11. Rule; conformity. A proverbial use.
I shall break no squares whether it be so or not.
12. Squares go. The game proceeds. Chessboards being full of squares.
One frog looked about him to see how squares went with their new king.
To SQUARE. v. a. [quadrare, Latin; from the noun.]
1. To form with right angles.
He employs not on us the hammer and the chizel, with an intent to wound or mangle us, but only to square and fashion our hard and stubborn hearts.
2. To reduce to a square.
Circles to squares, and cubes to double,
Would give a man excessive trouble.
3. To measure; to reduce to a measure.
Stubborn crickets, apt, without a theme
For depravation, to square all the sex
By Cressid's rule.
4. To adjust; to regulate; to mould; to shape.
Dreams are toys;
Yet for this once, yea superstitiously,
I will be square'd by this.
How frankly square my talk!
Thou'rt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And square's thy life accordingly.
God has designed us a measure of our undertakings; his word and law, by the proportions whereof we are to square our actions.

- The oracle was inforced to proclaim Socrates to be the wisest man in the world, because he applied his studies to the moral part, the squaring men's lives.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
A living sermon of the truths he taught;
For this by rules severe his life he square'd,
That all might see the doctrine which they heard.
This must convince all such who have, upon a wrong interpretation, presumed to square opinions by theirs, and have in loud exclamations shewn their abhorrence of university education.
5. To accommodate; to fit.
Eye me, blest providence, and square my trial
To my proportion'd strength.
6. To respect in quartile.
O'er libra's sign a crowd of foes prevails,
The icy goat and crab that square the scales.
Some professions can equally square themselves to, and thrive under all revolutions of government.
To SQUARE. v. n.
1. To suit with; to fit with.
I set them by the rule, and, as they square,
Or deviate from undoubted doctrine, fare.
His description squares exactly to lime.
These marine bodies do not square with those opinions, but exhibit phenomena that thwart them.
2. To quarrel; to go to opposite sides.
Are you such fools
To square for this? would it offend you then
That both should speed!
But they do square, that all their elves for fear
Creep into acorn cups, and hide them there.
SQUARENESS. n. f. [from square.] The state of being square.
This instrument is for striking lines square to other lines or straight lines, and try the squareness of their work.
Motion, squareness, or any particular shape, are the accidents of body.
SQUASH. n. f. [from quash.]
1. Any thing soft and easily crushed.
Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before it is a peacock, or a codling, when it is almost an apple.
2. [Melepepo.] A plant.
The characters are, it hath the whole appearance of a pumpkin or gourd; from which this differs in its fruit, which is roundish, fleshy, streaked, angular, and for the most part divided into five partitions, inclosing flat seeds adhering to a spongy placenta.
3. Any thing unripe; any thing soft. In contempt.
How like I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentleman.
4. A sudden fall.
Since they will overload my shoulders, I shall throw down the burden with a squash among them.
5. A shock of soft bodies.
My fall was stopped by a terrible squash that sounded louder than the cataract of Niagara.
To SQUASH. v. a. To crush into pulp.
To SQUAT. v. n. [quatere, Italian.] To sit cowering; to sit close to the ground.
SQUAT. adj. [from the verb.]
1. Cowering; close to the ground.
Him there they found,
Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve.
Her dearest comrades never caught her Squat on her hams.
2. Short and thick; having one part close to another, as those of an animal contracted and cowering.
The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish: the head is broad and squat.
Alma in verse, in prose, the mind,
By Aristotle's pen defin'd,
Throughout the body squat or tall,
Is bond squid, all in all.
SQUAT. n. f.
1. The posture of cowering or lying close.
A fitch-fall'n cheek that hangs below the jaw,
Such wrinkles as a skillful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at quats, and scrubs her leathern face.
2. A sudden fall.
Bruises, squats and falls, which often kill others, can bring little hurt to those that are temperate.
SQUAT. n. f. A sort of mineral.
The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated.
To SQUEAK. v. n. [squaka, Swedish.]
1. To set up a sudden dolorous cry; to cry out with pain.
2. To cry with a shrill acute tone.
The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored. Bacon.
 I see the new Arion sail,
 The lute still trembling underneath thy nail;
 Art thou well sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
 The trebles squeak for fear, the basses roar.
 Blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole, go off constantly at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar.
 Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans
squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch?
 How like brutes organs are to ours;
 They grant, if higher pow'r's think fit,
 A bear might soon be made a wit;
 And that for any thing in nature,
 Pigs might squeak love-odes, dogs bark fatyr.
 In florid impotence he speaks,
 And as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks.
 Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer.
 3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.
 If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
SQUEAK. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick cry; a cry of pain.
 Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
 In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
 With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
 Poor swine! as if their pretty hearts wou'd break. Dryden.
 To SQUEAL. v. n. [squeala, Swedish.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a cry continued.
SQUEAMISH. adj. [for quammish or qualmish, from qualm.]
 Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.
 Yet, for countenance sake, he seem'd very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the prince's Pamela. Sidney.
 Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish,
 That takes a basting for a blemish;
 For what's more honourable than scars,
 Of skin to tatters rent in wars?
 His musick is rustick, and perhaps too plain,
 The men of squeamish taste to entertain. Southern.
 It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious.
 There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the mo-derns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely consults his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either.
SQUEAMINESS. n. f. [from squeamish.] Niceness; delicacy;
 fastidiousness.
 The thorough-paced politician must presently laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture.
 Upon their principles they may revive the worship of the heft of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach.
 To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable.
 To SQUEEZE. v. a. [cp. Iran, Saxon; ys-gwasgu, Welsh.]
 1. To press; to crush between two bodies.
 It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the press for printing.
 The sinking of the earth would make an extraordinary convulsion of the air, and that crack must to shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours.
 He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground,
 And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd. Dryden.
 None acted mournings fore'd to show,
 Or squeez'd his eyes to make the torrent flow. Dryden.
 When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
 If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?
 2. To oppress; to crush; to harass by extortion.
 In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden.
 3. To force between close bodies.
 To SQUEEZE. v. n.
 1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.
 A concave sphere of gold fill'd with water and folder'd up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold.
 What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
 In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
 Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
 Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.
 2. To force way through close bodies.
 Many a publick minister comes empty in; but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off.

SQU

SQUEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.
 A subtle artill stands with wond'rous bags,
 That bears imprison'd winds, of gentler sort
 Than those that erst Laertes' son enclos'd;
 Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneful squeezes flow,
 Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly.
 Melodious, and with spritely accents charm.
SQUEEZE. n. f. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.
 He tore the earth which he had sav'd,
 From squeezes of knights, and storm'd and rav'd.
 So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squeezes, away he scampers, bawling like mad.
SQUIB. n. f. [schiden, German, to push forward. This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]
 1. A small pipe of paper filled with wildfire. Used in sport.
 The armada at Calais, fir Walter Raleigh was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manleas, and sent upon them. Bacon's War with Spain.
 The forest of the fourth, compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes.
 Lampons, like squibs, may make a present blaze;
 But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays.
 Furious he begins his march,
 Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch;
 With squibs and crackers arm'd to throw
 Among the trembling crowd below.
 2. Any petty fellow.
 Asked for their paps by every squib,
 That list at will them to revile or snib.
 The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers. Toller.
SQUILL. n. f. [quilla, scilla, Latin; squille, Fr.]
 1. A plant.
 It hath a large acrid bulbous root like an onion; the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves.
 Seed or kernels of apples and pears put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself.
 'Twill down like oxymel of squills.
 The self same atoms
 Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast;
 And nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste.
 2. A fish.
 3. An insect.
 The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings: the head broad and squat.
SQUINANCY. n. f. [quinancia, quinancia, Fr. quinancia, Italian].
 An inflammation in the throat; a quinsy.
 It is used for quinancies and inflammations of the throat;
 whereby it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.
 In a quinancy there is danger of suffocation.
SQUINT. adj. [quinte, Dutch, oblique, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.
 Where an equal poise of hope and fear
 Does arbitrate the event, my nature is That I incline to hope rather than fear,
 And gladly banish squint suspicion.
 To SQUINT. v. n. To look obliquely; to look not in a direct line of vision.
 Some can squint when they will; and children set upon a table with a candle behind them, both eyes will move outwards, as affecting to see the light, and so induce squinting.
 Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over against it.
 To SQUINT. v. a.
 1. To form the eye to oblique vision.
 This is the foul Filbertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hairlip.
 2. To turn the eye obliquely.
 Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown, and another upon the sanctuary.
SQUINTED. adj. [squint and eye.]
 1. Having the sight directed oblique.
 He was so squinted, that he seem'd spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld.
 2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.
 This is such a false and squinted praise,
 Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,
 Looks down upon my fears.
SQUINTING. adj. Squinting. A cant word.
 The timbrel and the squinting maid
 Of his awe thee; left the gods for sin,
 Should, with a swelling dropful stuff thy skin.

STA

To SQUINT. v. n. To look asquint. A cant word.
 I remember thine eyes well enough:
 Do st thou squint at me?
SQUIRE. n. f. [Contraction of esquire; esquier, French. See
ESQUIRE.]
 1. A gentleman next in rank to a knight.
 He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will,
 come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire.
 The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires,
 And gentlemen of blood.
 2. An attendant on a noble warrior.
 Old Bute's form he took, Anchises' squire.
 Now left to rule Ascanius.
 Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.
 3. An attendant at court.
 Return with her—
 I could as well be brought
 To kneel his throne, and squire-like pension beg.
 To keep base life a-foot.
SQUIRREL. n. f. [sciurus, French; sciurus, Latin.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.
 One chance'd to find a nut,
 In the end of which a hole was cut,
 Which lay upon a hazel-root,
 There scatter'd by a squirrel;
 Which out the kernel gotten had;
 When quoth this fay, dear queen be glad,
 Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
 I'll let you fare from peril.
 To SQUIRT. v. a. To throw out in a quick stream. Of uncertain etymology.
 Sir Roger the mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he pass'd along. Arbuthnot.
 To SQUIRT. v. n. To prate; to let fly. Low cant.
 You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister.
SQUIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.
 He with his squirt-fire cou'd disperse
 Whole troops.
 There is war declared by a lord; his weapons are a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter.
 2. A small quick stream.
 Water thow with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dugged water. Bacon's Natural History.
SQUIRTER. n. f. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt.
 The squirters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble.
 To STAB. v. a. [staven, old Dutch.]
 1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.
 Be't lawful, that I invoke thy ghost,
 To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
 Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
 Stab'd by the self same hand that made these wounds. Shak.
 Thou had'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
 Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart.
 To stab at my frail life. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 None shall dare
 With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war;
 But in fair combat fight.
 Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet, are looked on as no distinct species of action; but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name; as in England, where it is called stabbing.
 Porcius, think, thou seest thy dying brother
 Stab'd at his heart, and all belmeard with blood,
 Storming at thee!
 2. To wound mortally or mischievously.
 He speaks poinards, and every word stabs.
 What tears will then be shed!
 Then, to complete her woes, will I espouse
 Hermione.—'Twill stab her to the heart!
STAB. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A stab or wound with a sharp pointed weapon.
 The elements
 Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
 Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt at stabs.
 Kill the still cloving waters.
 2. A stab or wound with a sharp pointed weapon.
 Unworthy was thy fate, thou first of warriors,
 To fall beneath a base assassin's stab.
 2. A dark injury; a fly mischief.
 3. A stroke; a blow.
 He had a suitable scripture ready to repell them all; every pertinent text urg'd home being a direct stab to a temptation.
STABBER. n. f. [from stab.] One who stabs; a privy murderer.
STABILMENT. n. f. [from stabilis, Latin.] Support; firmness; act of making firm.
 They serve for stabilment, propagation and shade. Derham.

STABILITY. n. f. [stabilitas, Fr. from stabilis, Latin.]
 1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.
 By the same degrees that either of these happen, the sta- bility of the figure is by the same lessened.
 These mighty girders which the fabric bind,
 These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
 Such strength and such stability impart,
 That storms above, and earthquakes under ground
 Break not the pillars.
 He began to try
 This and that hanging stone's stability.
 2. Fixedness; not fluidity.
 Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this,
 that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion.
 3. Firmness of resolution.
STABLE. adj. [stabilis, Fr. stabilis, Latin.]
 1. Fixed; able to stand.
 2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.
 If man would be unvariable,
 He must be like a rock or stone, or tree;
 For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,
 But had a fall more desperate than we.
 He perfect, stable; but imperfect we,
 Subject to change.
 3. Strong; fixed in state.
 This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal; nothing could be offered to-day but what tomorrow might deprive us of.
STABLE. n. f. [stabilum, Latin.] A house for beasts.
 I will make Rabbah a stable for camels.
 To STABLE. v. n. [stabilis, Latin.] To kennel; to dwell as beasts.
 In their palaces,
 Where luxury late reign'd, sea monsters whelp'd
 And stabbed.
STABLEBOY. n. f. [stable and boy, or man.] One who attends in the stable.
 As soon as you alight at the inn, deliver your horses to the stableboy.
 If the gentleman hath lain a night, get the stablemen and the scullion to stand in his way.
 I would with jockeys from Newmarket dine,
 And to rough riders give my choicest wine;
 I would carefs some stableman of note,
 And imitate his language and his coat.
STABLENESS. n. f. [from stable.]
 1. Power to stand.
 2. Steadiness; constancy; stability.
 The king becoming graces,
 As justice, verity, temperance, stabilities,
 Bounty, perseverance, I have no reliſh of them. Shakespeare.
STABLESTAND. n. f. [In law.] Is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convinced to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest; and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip.
 I'll keep my stablestand where I lodge my wife, I'll go in couples with her.
 To STABLESTAND. v. a. [stabilis, Fr. stabilis, Latin.] To establish; to fix; to settle.
 Then the began a treaty to procure,
 And stabilish terms betwixt both their requests. Fairy Queen.
 Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
 And stabilish quietness on ev'ry side.
 Comfort your hearts, and stabilish you in every good work.
 Poor hereticks in love there be,
 Which think to stabilish dangerous constancy;
 But I have told them, since you will be true,
 You shall be true to them who're false to you.
 His covenant sworn
 To David, stabilish'd as the days of heav'n.
STACK. n. f. [stacca, Italian.]
 1. A large quantity of hay, corn, or wood, heaped up regularly together.
 Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine laid there.
 While the marquis and his servant on foot were chafing the kid about the stack, the prince from horseback killed him with a pistol.
 While the cock
 To the stack or the barn-door
 Stoutly trusts his dame before,
 Stacks of moist corn grow hot by fermentation. Newton.
 An inundation, says the fable,
 O'erflow'd a farmer's barn and stable;
 Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
 Were down the sudden current born.

2. A number of chimneys or funnels standing together.
A mason making a stack of chimneys, the foundation of the house sunk. Wife's Surgery.
To STACK. v. a. [from the noun.] To pile up regularly in ricks.

So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To stack on the pease. Tusser.
The prices of stacking up of wood I shall give you. Mort.
STACK. n. f. An aromatic; the gum that distills from the tree which produces myrrh.
Take sweet spices, stacte, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.
STADLE. n. f. [Jrabel, Saxon, a foundation.]
1. Any thing which serves for support to another.
2. A staff; a crutch.

He cometh on, his weak steps governing
And aged limbs on cypress staddle stout,
And with an ivy twine his waist is girt about. Fa. Queen.
3. A tree suffered to grow for coarse and common uses, as posts or rails. Of this meaning I am doubtful.
Leave growing for staddles the likeliest and best,
Though feller and buyer dispatched the rest. Tusser.
Coppice-woods, if you leave in them staddles too thick, will run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bac.
To STADLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with staddles.
First see it well fenced, ere hewers begin;
Then see it well staddled without and within. Tusser.
STADTHOLDER. n. f. [stad and henden, Dutch.] The chief magistrate of the United Provinces.
STAFF. n. f. plur. staves. [stæp, Saxon; staff, Danish; stasf, Dutch.]

1. A stick with which a man supports himself in walking.
It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you would make a staff.
To lean upon. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chaffinements, that thy rod as well as thy staff may comfort us. K. Charles.
Is it probable that he, who had met whole armies in battle, should now throw away his staff, out of fear of a dog. Broome.

2. A prop; a support.
Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts. Shakespeare.
The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shak.

3. A stick used as a weapon; a club; the handle of an edged or pointed weapon. A club properly includes the notion of weight, and the staff of length.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hid to bear their staves. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
He that bought the skin ran greater risk than Collier that fold it, and had the worse end of the staff. L'Estrange.
With forks and staves the felon they pursue. Dryden.

4. Any long piece of wood.
He forthwith from the glittering staff unsull'd
Th' imperial ensign. Milton.
To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forked staff we dextrously apply'd,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scooped out the big round gelly from its orb. Addison.

5. An ensign of an office; a badge of authority.
Methought this staff, mine office-badger in court,
Was broke in twain. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
All his officers brake their staves; but at their return new staves were delivered unto them. Hayward on Edward VI.

6. [Stef, Islandick] A stanza; a series of verses regularly disposed, so as that, when the stanza is concluded, the same order begins again.

Cowley found out that no kind of staff is proper for an heroic poem, as being all too lyrical; yet though he wrote in couplets, where rhyme is freer from constraint, he affects half verses. Dryden.

STA'FISH. adj. [from staff.] Stiff; harsh. Obsolete.
A wit in youth not over dull, heavy, knotty, and lumpish, but hard, tough, and though somewhat staffish, both for learning and whole course of living, proveth always best. Ascham.

STA'FFREE. n. f. A fort of ever green privet.
STAG. n. f. [Of this word I find no derivation.] The male red deer; the male of the hind.

To the place a poor sequestered stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakespeare, As you like it.

The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head. Milton.
Th' inhabitants of seas and skies shall change,
And fish on shore, and stags in air shall range. Dryden.

The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'erake his fore. Pope.

STAGE. n. f. [Stage, French.]
1. A floor raised to view on which any show is exhibited.
2. The theatre; the place of scenic entertainments.
And much good do't you then,
Prave plush and velvet men.

Can feed on ort; and, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. Ben. Jonson.
Those two Mytilene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knellet's Hist. of the Turks.
I maintain, against the enemies of the stage, that patterns of piety, decently represented, may second the precepts. Dryd.
One Livius Andronicus was the first stage player in Rome.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.
Among slaves, who exercised polite arts, none fold so dear as stage players or actors. Arbutnot on Cato.

3. Any place where any thing is publicly transacted, or performed.
When we are born, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shakespeare, King Lear.

4. A place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission. [Statio, Latin.]
I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and beseech you to go before me my guide. Hammond's Psalt. Catech.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber. Add.
From thence a compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head her last stage. Prior.

By opening a passage from Moscow to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of so many days. Baker.

5. A single step of gradual process.
The changes and vicissitude in wars are many; but chiefly in the feats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct. Bacon's Essay.

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even. Atterbury.
To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline. Rogers's Sermon.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by furgeons called digestion. Sharp's Surgery.
To STAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit publicly.
Out of use.

I love the people;
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

The quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

STAGECOACH. n. f. [Stage and coach.] A coach that keeps its stages; a coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach. Addison.

When late their mirthy fides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow,
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide. Gay.

STAGEPLAY. n. f. [Stage and play.] Theatrical entertainment.
This rough-cast unwhewn poetry was instead of stageplay for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

STAGER. n. f. [from stage.]
1. A player.
You safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. Ben. Jonson.

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a practitioner;
a person of cunning.
I've heard old cunning stagers
Say, fools for argument use wagers. Hudibras.

One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty traps and tricks before, discovered the plot. L'Estrange.

Some stagers of the wiser sort
Made all these idle wonderments their sport:
But he, who heard what ev'ry fool could say,
Would never fix his thought, but trim his time away. Dryd.

One cries out, these stagers
Come in good time to make more work for wagers. Dryd.
Be by a parson cheated!
Had you been cunning stagers,

You might yourselves be treated
By captains and by majors. Swift.

STAGEVIL. n. f. A disease in horses.
STAGEWARD. n. f. [from stage.] A four year old stag. Add.
To STAGGER. v. n. [Staggeren, Dutch.]

1. To reel; not to stand or walk steadily.
He began to appear sick and giddy, and to stagger; after which he fell down as dead.
Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight:
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow. Dryden.

Strange odds! where croppick drunkards must engage
An hungry foe. Tate's Juvenal.
The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo,
staggering, and loss of memory. Arbutnot.

2. To faint; to begin to give way.
The enemy stagers: if you follow your blow, he falls at your feet; but if you allow him respite, he will recover his strength. Addison.

3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.
A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt. Shak.
He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief;
but was strong in faith. Rom. iv. 20.

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger. Bacon.

No heretics desire to spread
Their light opinions, like these Epicures;
For to their staggering thoughts are comforted;
And other men assent their doubt assures. Davies.

If thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God. Hamm.
But let it inward sink and drown my mind:
Falshood shall want its triumph: I begin
To stagger; but I'll prop myself within. Dryden.

To STAGGER. v. a.
1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.
That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That stagers thus my person. Shakespeare, Richard II.

2. To shock; to alarm; to make less steady or confident.
The question did at first stagger me.
Bearing a fate of mighty moment in't. Shak. Henry VIII.

When a prince falls in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance. L'Estrange.
Whoever will read the story of this war, will find himself much staggered, and put to a kind of riddle.

The shells being lodged with the belemnites, selenites, and other like natural fossils, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that these were so too. Woodward.

STAGGERS. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A kind of horse apoplexy.
His horse past cure of the fives, stark spoil'd with the stag-
ger. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.

2. Madness; wild conduct; irregular behaviour. Out of use.
I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the stagers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance. Shak. All's well that ends well.

STAGNANCY. n. f. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.
STAGNANT. adj. [Stagnans, Latin.] Motionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample feat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat. Blackm.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant. Woodward.

Immur'd and buid in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Irene.

To STAGNATE. v. n. [Stagnum, Latin.] To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.
The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up. Woodw.

The salient moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows. Arbutnot.
Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marishes stagnate. Thomson.

STAGNATION. n. f. [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion.
As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time. Addison.

To what great ends subservient is the wind?
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies:
This from stagnation and corruption saves
Th' aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves. Blackmore's Creation.

STAIN. participial adjective. [from stey.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.
Put thyself
Into a humour of less fears, ere wildness
Vanquish my stain'd senses. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

This seems to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black stain'd widom's hue. Milton.

I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the Springs, after three years that they have well laid their grounds;
but to ride out, with prudent and stain'd guides, to all the quarters of the land. Milton on Education.

STAIN. n. f. [Stain and stey.] The part of a fabric that contains the stains.

STA

I am the more at ease in Sir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and staid persons. Addison.
STAI'NESS. n. f. [from staid.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity;
contrariety to wildness.

The boiling blood of youth, fiercely agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity and fixed staidness, which is necessary to so severe an intellect. Glanv. Scyl.

If sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret gracefulness of youth accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryd. Preface to Ovid.

To STAIN. v. a. [Stainio, Welsh, from ys and stennu.]
Rhag Gwyar or Gnowd,
Afar stainawd. Tate's Syn, an old British poet.

1. To blot; to spot; to maculate.
Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakespeare's King Lear.

From the gash a stream
His armour stain'd, ere while so bright. Milton.
Embrace again, my sons: be foes no more;
Nor stain your country with your children's gore. Dryden.

2. To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.
Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

STAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Blot; spot; discoloration.
Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains;
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains:
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden's En.

We no where meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that shew themselves in clouds of a different situation. Addison.

Swift trout diversify'd with crimson stains,
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains. Pope.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.
To solemn actions of royalty and justice their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain? Hobbes.
Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of he-rely. Hooker.

Then heav'n and earth renew'd, shall be made pure
To sanctity, that shall receive no stain. Milton's Par. Lost.
Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots; for if he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judg'd it a stain upon them for want of merit. Broome.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.
Hereby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet the stain of all womankind. Sidney.

STAINER. n. f. [from stain.] One who stains; one who blots.

STAINLESS. adj. [from stain.]
1. Free from blots or spots.
The phoenix wings are not so rare
For faultless length and stainless hue. Sidney.

2. Free from sin or reproach.
I cannot love him;
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth. Shakespeare.

STAIR. n. f. [stægen, Saxon; stige, Dutch.] Steps by which we rise an ascent from the lower part of a building to the upper. Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps;
but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible. Sidney.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars! Shakespeare.

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol. Shakespeare.
I would have one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty foot high. Bacon's Essay.

Sir James Tirrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot, and sent these two villains to execute the murder. Bacon.

There being good stairs at either end, they never went through each other's quarters.
The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and descending. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Satan now on the lower stair,
That seal'd by steps of gold to heav'n gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Trembling he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor fluid for stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body; on his back the door he drew. Dryden.

STAINCASE. n. f. [Stair and case.] The part of a fabric that contains the stains.

- To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture.
I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived. Addison on Italy.
- STAKE. n. f. [reaca, Saxon; staeck, Dutch; ostaco, Spanish.]
1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.
The more I staked the flake, which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it. Sidney.
His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge. Hosker.
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp stakes, plucked out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the raised vines in arbors make but verjuice. Bacon's Natural History.
Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine
The fallow twigs to tie the straggling vine. Dryden.
2. A piece of wood.
While he whirl'd in fiery circles round
The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dryas found,
And in the shoulder's joint inflicts the wound. Dryden.
3. Any thing placed as a pallade or fence.
That hollow I should know: what are you, speak?
Come not too near, you fall on iron stakes else. Milton.
4. The post to which a beast is tied to be baited.
We are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think? Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.
5. Any thing pledged or wagered. I know not well whence it has this meaning.
'Tis time short pleasure now to take,
Of little life the best to make,
And manage wisely the last stake. Cowley.
O then, what interest shall I make
To save my last important stake,
When the most just have cause to quake!
He ventures little for to great a stake. Rescannon.
Th' increasing sound is borne to either shore,
And for their stakes the throwing nations fear. Dryden.
The game was so contrived, that one particular cast took up the whole stake; and when some others came up, you laid down. Arbutnot.
6. The state of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.
When he heard that the lady Margaret was declared for it, he saw plainly that his kingdom must again be put to the stake, and that he must fight for it. Bacon's Henry VII.
Are not our liberties, our lives,
The laws, religion, and our wives,
Enough at once to lie at stake,
For cov'nant and the cause's sake? Hudibras.
Of my crown thou too much care do'st take;
Hath any of you a great interest at stake in a distant part of the world? Hath he ventured a good share of his fortune? Al.
Every moment Cato's life is at stake. Addison, Cato.
7. The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the work-bench, to remove as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the bottom let into some place of the work-bench, not to be removed. Its office is to set small cold work straight upon, or to cut or punch upon with the cold chisel or cold punch. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
To STAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten, support, or defend with posts set upright.
Stake and bind up your weakest plants and flowers against the winds, before they in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour.  Evelyn's Calendar.
2. To wager; to hazard; to put to hazard.
Is a man betrayed in his nearest concerns? The cause is, he relied upon the services of a pack of villains, who designed nothing but their own game, and to stake him while they play'd for themselves. Swift.
Persons, after their prisons have been slung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons than stake their miserable lives on the success of a revolution. Addison.
They durst not stake their present and future happiness on their own chimerical imaginations. Addison.
I'll stake you' lamb that near the fountain plays,
And from the brink his dancing shade surveys. Pope.
STALACTITES. n. f. [from σταλακτη.]
Stalactites is only far in the shape of an icicle, accidentally formed in the perpendicular fissures of the stone. Woodward.
STALACTICAL. adj. Resembling an icicle.
A cave was lined with those stalactical stones on the top and sides. Derham's Physico-Theology.
STALAGMITES. n. f. Spar formed into the shape of drops. Woodward's Meth. Foss.

- STALE. adj. [from stale, Dutch.]
1. Old; long kept; altered by time. Stale is not used of persons otherwise than in contempt.
This, Richard, is a curious case:
Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale,
In this sad state your doubtful choice
Would never have the casting voice. Prior.
A stale virgin sets up a shop in a place where she is not known.
2. Used 'till it is of no use or esteem; worn out of regard or notice.
The duke regarded not the muttering multitude, knowing that rumours grow stale and vanish with time. Hayward.
About her neck a packet mail,
Fraught with advice, some fresh, some stale,
Many things beget opinion; so doth novelty: wit itself, if stale, is less taking. Butler.
Pompey was a perfect favourite of the people; but his pretensions grew stale for want of a timely opportunity of introducing them upon the stage.
They reason and conclude by precedent,
And own stale nonsense which they ne'er invent. Pope.
STALE. n. f. [from stale, Saxon, to steal.]
1. Something exhibited or offered as an allurement to draw others to any place or purpose.
His heart being wholly delighted in deceiving us, we could never be warned; but rather one bird caught, served for a stale to bring in more. Sidney.
Still as he went he crafty stales did lay,
With cunning trains him to entrap unwares;
And privy spials plac'd in all his way,
To weet what course he takes, and how he fares. Pope, 2d.
The trumpet in my house bring hither,
For stale to catch these thieves. Shakespeare, Timon.
Had he none else to make a stale but me?
I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
A pretence of kindness is the universal stale to all base projects: by this men are robbed of their fortunes, and women of their honour. Governorment of the Tongue.
It may be a vizor for the hypocrite, and a stale for the ambitious.
This easy fool must be my stale, set up
To catch the people's eyes: he's tame and merciful;
Him I can manage. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
2. In Shakespeare it seems to signify a prostitute.
I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale. Shakespeare, Titus.
3. [From stale, adj.] Urine; old urine.
4. Old beer; beer somewhat acidulated.
5. [Stale, Dutch, a stick.] A handle.
It hath a long stale or handle, with a button at the end for one's hand. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To STALE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To wear out; to make old.
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Were I a common laughter, or did life
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protestor. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On subject orts and imitations;
Which, out of use, and stal'd by other men,
Begin his fashion. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
To STALE. v. n. [from the noun.] To make water.
Having ty'd his beast t' a pale,
And taken time for both to stale. Hudibras.
STALELY. adv. [from stale.] Of old; long time.
All your promise'd mountains
And seas I am so stalely acquainted with. Ben. Johnson.
STALENESS. n. f. [from stale.] Oldness; state of being long kept; state of being corrupted by time.
The beer and wine, as well within water as above, have not been palled; but somewhat better than bottles of the same drinks and stale, kept in a cellar. Bacon's Nat. History.
Provided our landlord's principles were sound, we did not take any notice of the *stale*ness of his provisions. Addison.
To STALK. v. n. [realecan, Saxon.]
1. To walk with high and superb steps. It is used commonly in a sense of dislike.
His monstrous enemy
With sturdy steps came stalking in his sight. Fairy Queen.
Shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we challeng'd it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession? Shakespeare, King John.
Unfold th' eternal door:
You see before the gate what stalking ghost
Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post. Dryden.

STA

- Bertran
Stalks close behind her, like a witch's fiend Pressing to be employ'd. Dryden's Spanish Fugate.
They pass their precious hours in plays and sports,
Till death behind came stalking on unseen. Dryden.
With manly mien he stalk'd along the ground;
Nor wanted voice bely'd, nor vaunting found. Dryden.
Then stalking through the deep
He fords the ocean, while the topmost wave Scarcely reaches up his middle side. Addison.
'Tis not to stalk about, and draw fresh air
From time to time. Addison's Cato.
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways,
Nor shut from artful bow's, nor lost in winding maze. Pope.
Scornful turning from the valley
My haughty step, I stalk'd the floor o'er. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To walk behind a stalking horse or cover.
The king asked how far it was to a certain town: they said six miles. Half an hour after he asked again: one said six miles and a half. The king alighted out of his coach, and crept under the shoulder of his led horse: and when some asked his majesty what he meant, I must stalk, said he; for yonder town is lye, and flies me. Bacon's Apophthegms.
STALK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. High, proud, wide, and lately step.
Behind it forth there leapt
An ugly fiend, more foul than dismal day:
The which with monstrous stalk behind him stept,
And ever as he went due watch upon him kept. Pope, Queen.
Great Milton next, with high and haughty stalks, Unfetter'd in majestic numbers walks. Addison.
2. [Stalk, Dutch.] The stem on which flowers or fruits grow.
A rock-gillyflower, gently tied on a stick, put into a steep glass full of quicksilver, so that the quicksilver cover it; after five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was. Bacon.
Small store will serve, where store,
All seasons, ripe for use hangs on the stalk. Milton.
That amber attracts not basil is wholly repugnant unto truth; for if the leaves thereof, or dried stalks, be stripped unto small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no otherwise than those of wheat and rye. Brown.
Roses unbud, and every fragrant flower,
Flow from their stalks to appear thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.
3. The stem of a quill.
Viewed with a glass, they appear made up of little bladders, like those in the plume or stalk of a quill. Gravi.
STALKINGHORSE. n. f. [stalking and horse.] A horse either real or fictitious by which a fowler shelters himself from the sight of the game; a mask; a pretence.
Let the counsellor give counsel not for faction but for conscience, forbearing to make the good of the state the stalking-horse of his private ends. Hobbes on Providence.
Hypocrisy is the devil's stalking-horse, under an affectation of simplicity and religion. L'Estrange.
STALKY. adj. [from stalk.] Hard like a stalk.
It grows upon a round stalk, and at the top bears a great stalky head. Mortimer.
STALL. n. f. [reale, Saxon; stall, Dutch; stalla, Italian.]
1. A crib in which an ox is fed, or where any horse is kept in the stable.
A herd of oxen then he carv'd, with high rais'd heads, Farg'd all
Of gold and tin, for colour mixt, and bellowing from their stalls.
Rusht to their pastures. Chapman's Iliad.
Duncan's horses,
Beauteous and swift, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses. 1 Kings iv.
His fellow fought what lodging he could find;
At last he found a stall where oxen stood. Dryden.
2. A bench or form where any thing is set to sale.
Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
They are nature's coarser wares that lie on the stall, exposed to the transient view of every common eye. Glavin.
Bels Troy first found it troublesome to bawl,
And therefore plac'd her cherries on a stall. King.
How pedlars stalks with glittering toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid. Gay.
Harley, the nation's great support,
Returning home one day from court,
Obliv'd a parson near Whitehall, Chap'n'ing old authors on a stall. Swift.

3. [Stall, Swedish; stall, Armoric.] A small house or shed in which certain trades are practised.
All these together in one heap were thrown,
Like carcasses of beasts in butcher's stall;
And in another corner wide were thrown
The antique ruins of the Roman fall. Fairy Queen.
4. The seat of a dignified clergyman in the choir.
The pope creates a canon beyond the number limited, and commands the chapter to assign unto such canon a stall in the choir and place in the chapter. Ayliffe's Paragon.
The dignified clergy, out of mere humility, have called their thrones by the names of stalls. Warburton.
To STALL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To keep in a stall or stable.
For such encheafon, if you go nie,
Few chimneys reeking you will spy;
The fat ox, that wont ligg in the stall,
Is now stall'd in his crumena. Spenser's Pastoral.
For my part, he keeps me rustically at home; or, to speak more properly, flies me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping, for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox?
Nimis the forest pass'd,
And Alban plains, from Alba's name so call'd,
Where king Latinus then his oxen stall'd. Dryden.
2. [For in stall.] To invest.
Long may'st thou live to wait thy children's loss;
And see another as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine. Shakespeare.
To STALL. v. n.
1. To inhabit; to dwell.
We could not stall together in the world. Shakespeare.
2. To kennel.
STALL'ED. adj. [stall and fed.] Fed not with grafs but dry feed.
Stall'd oxen, and crammed fowls, are often diseased in their livers. Arbutnot on Animals.
STALL'WORN. adj. [stall and worn.] Long kept in the stable. But it is probably a mistake for stallworn, [reaphep; Saxon, stout.]
His stallworn steed the champion front bestrode. Shakespeare.
STALLION. n. f. [stallion, an old Welch word; the one is derived from the other; but which from which I cannot certainly tell. Watson. Estallion, French; stallion, Italian; stallion, Dutch. Junius thinks it derived from stallion, to leap.] A horse kept for mares.
The present defects are breeding without choice of stallions in shape or size. Temple.
If fleet Dragon's progeny at last Prove jaded, and in frequent matches cast,
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden.
I will not ask him one of his Egyptians;
No, let him keep 'em all for slaves and stallions. Dryden.
STAMINA. n. f. [Latin.]
1. The first principles of anything.
2. The solids of a human body.
3. [In botany.] Those little fine threads or capillaments which grow up within the flowers of plants, encompassing round the style, and on which the apices grow at their extremities.
STAMINEOUS. adj. [stamineus, Latin.]
1. Consisting of threads.
2. Staminate flowers.
Stamineous flowers are so far imperfect as to want those coloured leaves which are called petals, and consist only of the stylus and the stamina; and such plants as do bear these stamineous flowers Ray makes to constitute a large genus of plants: these he divides into such as, first, have their fruit or seed totally divided from the flower; and these are such plants as are said to be of different sexes: the reason of which is, that from the said seed some plant shall arise with flowers and no fruit, and others with fruit and no flowers; as hops, hemp, flax, nettles. 2. Such as have their fruit only a little disjointed from their flowers; as the ricinus; and the heliotropium triconon. 3. Such as have their fruit immediately contiguous, or adhering to their flower. 4. Such whole flowers adhere to the top or uppermost of the feed; as the beta, asarum, and alchimilla.
STAMMEL. n. f. Of this word I know not the meaning.
Reedhood, the first that doth appear
In stammel: scarlet is too dear. Ben. Johnson.
To STAMMER. v. n. [reame, a stammerer, Saxon; stammer, Saxon; stammer, Dutch.] To speak with unnatural hesitation; to utter words with difficulty.
Sometimes to her news of myself to tell
I go about; but then is all my best
Wry words, and stammering, or else doltish dumb:
Say then, can this but of enchantment come? Sidney.
I would thou could'st stammer, that thou might'st pour out
Of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bottle, either too much at once, or none at all. Shakespeare.
She

STA

- She flammers; oh what grace in liping lies!
If she says nothing, to be sure she's wife.
Dryden.
- Which flammering tongues and flaggering feet produce.
Cornelius hoped he would come to flammer like Demoisthenes.
Arbutn. Mart. Scrib.
- Your hearers would rather you should be less correct, than perpetually flammering, which is one of the worst solecisms in rhetoric.
Swift.
- STAMMERER. n. f. [from flammer.] One who speaks with hesitation.
A stammerer cannot with moderation hope for the gift of tongues, or a peasant to become learned as Origen.
Taylor.
- TO STAMP. v. a. [stampen, Dutch; stampen, Danish.]
1. To strike by pressing the foot hastily downwards.
If Arcite thus deplore
His fuff' rings, Palamon yet suffers more:
He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground;
The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around.
Dryden.
2. To pound; to beat as in a mortar.
I took the calf you had made, burnt it with fire, and stamped and ground it very small.
Deutr. ix. 21.
- Some apothecaries, upon stamping of colicoquinta, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only.
Bacon.
3. To impress with some mark or figure.
Height of place is intended only to stamp the endowments of a private condition with lustre and authority.
South.
- Here twells the self with Ogilby the great;
There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete.
Pope.
4. To fix a mark by impressing it.
Out of mere ambition, you have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin.
Shakespeare.
- These prodigious conceits in nature spring out of framing abstracted conceptions, instead of those easy and primary notions which nature stamps alike in all men of common sense.
Digby on Bodies.
- There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience.
South's Sermons.
- No constant reason of this can be given, but from the nature of man's mind, which hath this notion of a deity born with it, and stamped upon it; or is of such a frame, that in the free use of itself it will find out God.
Tillotson.
- Though God has given us no innate ideas of himself, though he has stamp'd no original characters on our minds, wherein we may read his being; yet having furnished us with those faculties our minds are endowed with, he hath not left himself without witnesses.
Locke.
- Can they perceive the impressions from things without, and be at the same time ignorant of those characters which nature herself has taken care to stamp within?
Locke.
- What titles had they had, if nature had not Strove hard to thrust the worst deserving first,
Upon their baser metal?
Rousse's Ambitious Step-mother.
- What an unpeakable happiness would it be to a man engaged in the pursuit of knowledge, if he had but a power of stamping his best sentiments upon his memory in indelible characters?
Watts.
5. To make by impressing a mark.
If two penny weight of silver, marked with a certain impression, shall here in England be equivalent to three penny weight marked with another impression, they will not fail to stamp pieces of that fashion, and quickly carry away your silver.
Locke.
6. To mint; to form; to coin.
We are bastards all;
And that most venerable man, which I did call my father, was I know not where
When I was stamp'd.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
- TO STAMP. v. n. To strike the foot suddenly downward.
What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool, to brag, to stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Shakespeare.
- The men shall howl at the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses.
Jer. xlvii. 3.
- There is such an echo among the old ruins and vaults, that, if you stamp but a little louder than ordinary, you hear the sound repeated.
Addison's Spectator.
- He cannot bear th' astonishing delight,
But starts, exclaims, and stamps, and raves and dies.
Dennis.
- They got to the top, which was flat and even, and stamping upon it, they found it was hollow.
Gulliver's Travels.
- STAMP. n. f. [stamppe, French; stampa, Italian.]
1. Any instrument by which a hollow impression is made.
Some other nymphs, with colours faint
And pencil slow, may Cupid paint,
And a weak heart in time destroy:
She has a stamp, and prints the boy.
Waller.

- 'Tis gold so pure,
It cannot bear the stamp without alloy.
Dryden.
2. A mark set on any thing; impression.
That sacred name gives ornament and grace,
And, like his stamp, makes basest metals pals;
'Twere folly now a statue to raise,
To build a playhouse, while you throw down plays.
Dryden.
- Idea are imprinted on the memory; some by an object affecting the senses only; others, that have more than once offered themselves, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind, intent only on one thing, not settling the stamp deep into itself.
Locke.
3. A thing marked or stamped.
The mere despair of surgery he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers.
Shakespeare. Macbeth.
4. A picture cut in wood or metal; a picture made by impression;
a cut; a plate.
At Venice they put out very curious stamps of the several edifices, which are most famous for their beauty and magnificence.
Addison on Italy.
5. A mark set upon things that pay customs to the government.
Indeed the paper stamp
Did very much his genius cramp;
And since he could not spend his fire,
He now intended to retire.
Swift.
6. A character of reputation, good or bad, fixed upon any thing.
The persons here reflected upon are of such a peculiar stamp of impiety, that they seem formed into a kind of diabolical society for the finding out new experiments in vice.
South.
- Where reason or scripture is exprest for any opinion, we may receive it as of divine authority; but it is not the strength of our own persuasions which can give it that stamp.
Locke.
7. Authority; currency; value derived from any suffrage or attestation.
Of the same stamp is that which is obtruded upon us, that an adamant suspends the attraction of the loadstone.
Brown.
- The common people do not judge of vice or virtue by morality, or the immorality, so much as by the stamp that is set upon't by men of figure.
L'Estrange.
8. Make; cast; form.
If speaking truth
In this fine age were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should this Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp.
Shakespeare.
- Should go to general current through the world.
When one man of an exemplary improbity charges another of the same stamp in a court of justice, he lies under the disadvantage of a strong suspicion.
L'Estrange.
- Let a friend to the government relate to him a matter of fact, he gives him the lie in every look; but if one of his own stamp should tell him that the king of Sweden would be suddenly at Perth, he hugs himself at the good news.
Addison.
- STAMPER. n. f. [from stamp.] An instrument of pounding.
From the stamping-mill it passeth through the crazing-mill;
but of late times they mostly use wet stampers.
Carew.
- STAN, amongst our forefathers, was the termination of the superlative degree: to Albestan, most noble; to Bastan, the best;
to Leoffan, the dearest; to Wyfan, the wisest; to Dwyfan, the highest.
Gilbert's Camden.
- TO STANCH. v. a. [stancher, French; stagnare, Italian.] To stop blood; to hinder from running.
Iron or a stone, laid to the neck, doth stanch the bleeding of the nose.
Bacon's Natural History.
- Of veins of earth medicinal are terra lemnis, terra sigillata, communis, and bolus armenus; whereby terra lemnis is the chief: the virtues of them are for curing of wounds, stanching of blood, and stopping of fluxes and rheums.
Bacon.
- Leeches, inwardly taken, fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood, which cannot be easily stanch'd.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- He fought to hinder fighting, and assayed

And fiery foaming steeds: what stood, recoi'd
O'erweary'd, through the faint satanic host Defensive scarce, or with pale fear surpris'd Fled ignominious.
Milton's Paradise Lost.
5. To become erect.
The rooted fibres rose, and from the wound
Black bloody drops distill'd upon the ground;
Mute, and amaz'd, my hair with horror stood;
Fear thrunk my senses, and congeal'd my blood.
Dryden.
- Her hair stood up; convulsive rage posses'd
Her trembling limbs.
Dryden's En.

though sometimes they stare up in our minds of their own accord. Locke.
Might stare Dryden bless once more our eyes,
New Blackmoors and new Milbourns must arise;
Nay, should great Homer list his awful head,
Zeus again would stare up from the dead. Pope.
3. To move with sudden quickness.
The flowers, call'd out of their beds, stare up
Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Shakespeare.
A spirit fit to stare into an empire, stare.
And took the world to law. Dryden's Chaucer.
She at the fumblings roll'd her eyes around,
And snatch'd the staring serpents from the ground. Pope.
4. To shrink; to winch.
What trick, what staring hole, can't thou find out to hide thee from this open flame? Shakespeare's Henry IV.
With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chafte, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he stares,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakespeare.
5. To deviate.
The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest sort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whenever any of them stare out. Spenser on Ireland.
I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which stare from nature's common rules,
With bearded infants, and with teeming mules. Crashaw.
Keep your soul to the work when ready to stare aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination. Watts.
6. To set out from the barrier at a race.
It seems to be rather a staring a quo than a true principle,
as the staring post is none of the horse's legs.
Should some god tell me, that I should be born
And cry again, his offer I should scorn;
Adam'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first staring place. Dante.
When from the goal they stare,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
The clangor of the trumpet gives the sign;
At once they stare, advancing in a line. Dryden.
7. To set out on any pursuit.
Fair course of passion, where two lovers stare,
And run together, heart still yoked with heart.
People, when they have themselves weary, let up their rest upon the very spot where they stare. L'Estrange.
When two stare into the world together, he that is chosen behind, unless his mind proves generous, will be displeased with the other. Collier.
To STAR. v. a.
1. To alarm; to disturb suddenly.
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once star me. Shakespeare.
Being full of supper and distemp'ring draughts;
Upon malicious bravery do'st thou come. Shakespeare's Othello.
To star my quiet.
The very print of a fox-foot would have starred ye. L'Estr.
2. To make to start or fly hastily from a hiding place.
The blood more stirs
To rouse a lion than to star a hare. Shakespeare.
I starred from its vernal bow'r
The rising game, and chaf'd from flow'r to flow'r. Pope.
3. To bring into motion; to produce to view or notice; to produce unexpectedly.
Conjure with 'em! Shakespeare.
Brutus will star a spirit as soon as Cæsar. Shakespeare.
It was unadvisedly done, when I was enforcing a whistler design, to star and follow another of less moment.
Insignificant cavils may be starred against every thing that is not capable of mathematical demonstration. Addison.
I was engaged in conversation upon a subject which the people love to bring within pursuit. Addison's Freeholder.
4. To discover; to bring within pursuit.
The sensual men agree in pursuit of every pleasure they can find. Temple.
5. To put suddenly out of place.
One, by a fall in wrestling, starred the end of the clavicle from the sternon. Wifeman's Surgery.

START. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden twitch or contraction of the frame from fear or alarm.
1. A motion of terror; a sudden twitch or contraction of the frame from fear or alarm.
These flaws and starts would well become
A woman's story at a Winter's fire, Shakespeare.
Authoriz'd by her grandame. Shakespeare.
The night awaken'd Arcite with a start; Shakespeare.
Against his bosom bound his heaving heart. Dryden.
2. A sudden rousing to action; excitement.
How much had I to do to calm his rage! Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Now fear I this will give it start again. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
3. Sudden eruption; sudden effusion.
Thou art like enough, through valiant fear,
Bare inclination, and the start of spleen, Shakespeare.
To fight against me under Percy's pay. Shakespeare.
Several starts of fancy off-hand, look well enough; but bring them to the test, and there is nothing in 'em. L'Estrange.
Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and fallies of the soul? Addison's Cato.
We were well enough pleased with this start of thought. Add.
4. Sudden fit; intermitted action.
Methought her eyes had cross'd her tongue;
For she did speak in starts distractedly. Shakespeare.
They turns are studied arts.
Thy subtle ways be narrow straits;
Thy curstly but sudden starts. Ben. Johnson.
And what thou call'st thy gifts are baits.
Nature does nothing by starts and leaps, or in a hurry; but
bring them to the test, and there is nothing in 'em. L'Estrange.
An ambiguous expression, a little chagrin, or a start of passion, is not enough to take leave upon. Collier.
5. A quick spring or motion.
In starts, the more they are wound up and strained, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound; and the weaker they are, or less wound up, the baser is the sound. Bacon's Natural History.
Both cause the string to give a quicker start. Bacon.
How could water make those visible starts upon freezing, but by some subtle freezing principle which as suddenly shoots into it. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.
6. First emission from the barrier; act of setting out.
You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakespeare's Henry V.
All leapt to chariot,
And every man then for the start cast in his proper lot. Chap.
If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start of first performance is all. Bacon.
7. To get the START. To begin before another; to obtain advantage over another.
Get the start of the majestic world. Shakespeare's Jul. Cæs.
All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party, during that time, doth cautiously get the start and advantage at common law, yet the pretorian court will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.
Doubtless some other heart
Will get the start. Shakespeare.
And, stepping in before,
Will take possession of the sacred floor
Of hidden sweets. Crashaw.
Ere the knight could do his part,
The squire had got so much the start,
H' had to the lady done his errand,
And told her all his tricks beforehand. Hudibras.
She might have forsaken him, if he had not got the start of her. Dryden's Ann. Dedication.
The reason why the mathematics and mechanic arts have so much got the start in growth of other sciences, may be resolved into this, that their progress hath not been retarded by that reverential awe of former discoverers. Clarville.
The French year has got the start of ours more in the works of nature than the new file. Addison.
STARTER. n. f. [from start.] One that shrinks from his purpose.
Stand to it boldly, and take quarter,
To let thee see I am no starter. Hudibras.

What then! Is the reward of virtue bread? Pope.
5. To be destroyed with cold.
Had the seeds of the pepper-plant been born from Java to these northern countries, they must have starved for want of
sun. Woodward's Natural History.
To STARVE. v. a.
1. To kill with hunger.
I cannot blame his cousin king,
That with'd him on the barren mountains starv'd. Shakespeare.
Hunger and thirst, or guns and swords,
Give the same death in different words: Shakespeare.
To push this argument no further,
To starve a man in law is murder. Prior.
If they had died through fasting, when meat was at hand, they would have been guilty of starving themselves. Pope.
2. To subdue by famine.
Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shakespeare.
He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
As men by fasting starve th' untam'd disease. Dryden.
Attalus endeavoured to starve Italy, by stopping their convoy of provisions from Africa. Abulnot on Coins.
3. To kill with cold.
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immovable, infix'd, and frozen round. Milton's Par. Lost.
4. To deprive of force or vigour.
The powers of their minds are starved by disuse, and have lost that reach and strength which nature fitted them to receive. Locke.
STARVELING. n. f. [from starve.] An animal thin and weak

Poor starveling bard, how small thy gains!
How unproportion'd to thy pains! Swift.
STARWORT. n. f. [after, Latin.] See ELECAMpane.
It hath a fibrous root: the leaves for the most part intire, and placed alternately on the branches: the stalks are branched;
the flowers radiated, specious, and have a fealy cup: the seeds are inclosed in a downy substance. Miller.
STATARY. adj. [from status, Latin.] Fixed; settled.
The set and statary times of pairing of nails, and cutting of hair, is but the continuation of ancient superstition, Brown.
STATE. n. f. [from status, Latin.]
1. Condition; circumstances of nature or fortune.
I do not
Infer as if I thought my sister's state Secure. Milton.
Relate what Latinum was,
Declare the past and present state of things. Dryden's Æn.
Like the papists is your poets state, Pope.
Poor and disarr'd.
2. Modification of any thing.
Keep the state of the question in your eye. Boyle.
3. Stationary point; crisis; height; point from which the next movement is regression.
The deer that endureth the womb but eight months, and is complet at six years, cannot live much more than thirty, as having passed two general motions; that is, its beginning and increase; and having but two more to run through, that is, its state and declination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Tumours have their several degrees and times; as beginning, augment, state, and declination: Wifeman.
4. [Estate, French.] Estate; signiory; possession.
Strong was their plot,
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.
5. The community; the publick; the commonwealth.
If any thing more than your sport
Did move your greatness, and this noble state,
To call on him, he hopes it is no other
But for your health sake. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.
A state's anger
Should not take knowledge either of fools or women.
I hear her talk of state matters and the senate: Ben. Johnson.
What he got by fortune,
It was the state that now must make his right. Daniel.
The state hath given you licence to stay on land for the space of six weeks. Bacon.
It is better the kingdom should be in good estate, with particular loss to many of the people, than that all the people should be well, and the state of the kingdom altogether lost. Hayward.
It is a bad exchange to wound a man's own conscience, thereby to falve state forces. King Charles.
For you we stay'd, as did the Grecian state
Till Alexander came. Waller.
Since they all live by begging, it were better for the state to keep them. Graunt.
These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhadamantus rules the state: Dryden's Æn.
He hears and judges.
6. Hence single state in Shakspeare for individuality.
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in fumie. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
7. A republick; a government not monarchical.
They feared nothing from a state so narrow in compass of land, and so weak, that the strength of their armies has ever been made up of foreign troops. Temple.
8. Rank; condition; quality.
Fair dame, I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakspeare.
High state the bed is where misfortune lies. Fairfax.
9. Solemn pomp; appearance of greatness.
When in triumphant state the British muse,
True to herself, shall barb'rous aid refuse. Roscommon.
There kings receiv'd the marks of foreign pow'r:
In state the monarchs march'd, the listors bore
The awful axes and the rods before. Dryden's Æn.
Let my attendants wait: I'll be alone,
Where least of state, where most of love is shown. Dryden.
To appear in their robes would be a troublesome piece of state. Collier.
At home surrounded by a fervent crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud;
Abroad begirt with men, and fwords, and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.
10. Dignity; grandeur.
She instructed him how he should keep state, and yet with a modest sense of his misfortunes. Bacon's Henry VII.
The swan rows her state with oary feet. Milton.
He was staid, and in his gait
Preserv'd a grave majestic state. Baile.

Such cheerful modesty, such humble state,
Moves certain love. Waller.
Can this imperious lord forget to reign,
Quit all his state, descend, and serve again. Pope's Statian.
11. A seat of dignity.
This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
As the affected not the grandeur of a state with a canopy, the thought there was no offence in an elbow-chair. Arbuthnot.
The brain was her study, the heart her state room. Arbuthnot.
12. A canopy; a covering of dignity.
Over the chair is a state made round of ivy, somewhat whiter than ours; and the state is curiously wrought with silver and silk. Bacon.
His high throne, under state
Of richest texture spread, at th' upper end
Was plac'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
13. A person of high rank. Obsolete.
She is a dutchess, a great state. Latimer.
14. The principal persons in the government.
The bold design
Pleas'd highly those infernal states. Milap.
15. Joined with another word it signifies publick.
I am no courtier, nor versed in state-affairs: my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.
Council! What's that? a pack of bearded slaves,
The scavengers that sweep states nuisances,
And are themselves the greatest. Dryden's Cleomenes.
I am accus'd of reflecting upon great states-folks. Swift.
TO STATE. v. a. [from statuere, French.]
1. To settle; to regulate.
This is to state a rule, that all casuists press it in all cases of damage. Decay of Piety.
This is to state accounts, and looks more like merchantize than friendship. Collier of Friendship.
He is capable of corruption who receives more than what is the stated and unquestioned fee of his office. Adison.
2. To represent in all the circumstances of modification.
Many other inconveniences are consequent to this statu of this question; and particularly that, by those which thus state it, there hath never yet been assigned any definite number of fundamentals. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Its present state stateth it to be what it now is. Hale.
Were our case stated to any sober heathen, he would never guess why they who acknowledge the necessity of prayer, and confess the same God, may not alk in the same form.
Decay of Piety.
To state it fairly, imitation is the most advantageous way for a translator to shew himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the memory of the dead. Dryden.
I pretended not fully to state, much less demonstrate,
the truth contained in the text. Atterbury.
STATELINESS. n. f. [from statuere.]
1. Grandeur; majestic appearance; august manner; dignity.
We may collect the excellency of the understanding then by the glorious remainders of it now, and guess at the *stateline*s of the building by the magnificence of its ruins. Smith.
For *stateline*s and majesty what is comparable to a horse?
Moré's Antidote against Abstinence.
2. Appearance of pride; affected dignity.
She hated *stateline*s; but wisely knew
What just regard was to her title due. Battem.
STATELY. adj. [from statuere.]
1. August; grand; lofty; elevated; majestic; magnificent.
A statelier pyramid to her I'll rear. Shakspeare's Henry VI.
Than Rhodope's or Memphis' ever was.
These regions have abundance of high cedars, and other stately trees casting a shade. Raleigh's History of the World.
Truth, like a stately dome, will not shew herself at the first visit. Shakspeare.
He many a walk travers'd
Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm. Milton.
2. Elevated in mind or sentiment.
He maintains majesty in the midst of plainness, and is stateli without ambition, which is the vice of Lucan. Dryden.
STATELY. adv. [from the adjective.] Majestically.
Ye that stateli tread or lowly creep. Milton.
STATESMAN. n. f. [from statuere and man.]
1. A politician; one versed in the arts of government.
It looks grave enough. Ben. Johnson's Epigr.
To seem a statesman. Pope's Dunciad.
The corruption of a poet is the generation of a stateli man. Pope.
2. One employed in publick affairs.
If such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. Shakspeare's Othello.
It is a weakness which attends high and low; the statesmen who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the pough. South's Sermons.
A British minister must expect to see many friends fall off whom he cannot gratify, since, to use the phrase of a late stateli man, the pasture is not large enough. Adison.
Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.
STATESWOMAN. n. f. [from statuere and woman.] A woman who meddles with publick affairs. In contempt.
How she was in debt, and where she meant
To raise fresh sums: she's a great stateswoman! Ben. Johnson.
Several objects may innocently be ridiculed, as the passions of our stateswomen. Adison.
STATICAL. adj. [from the noun.] Relating to the science of weighing.
A man weigheth some pounds less in the height of Winter, according to experience, and the statistical aphorisms of Sanctorius. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If one by a statistical engine could regulate his insensible per-piration, he might often, by restoring of that, foreste, prevent, or shorten a fit of the gout. Arbuthnot in Diet.
STATICKS. n. f. [from statuere, French.] The science which considers the weight of bodies.
This is a catholic rule of staticks, that if any body be bulk for bulk heavier than a fluid, it will sink to the bottom; and if lighter, it will float upon it, having part extant, and part immersed, as that to much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part be equal in gravity to the whole. Bentley.
STATION. n. f. [from statuere, French; statu, Latin.]
1. The act of standing.
Their manner was to stand at prayer, whereupon their meetings unto that purpose on those days had the names of stations given them. Hooker.
2. A state of rest.
All progression is performed by drawing on or impelling forward some part which was before in station or at quiet, where there are no joints. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
3. A place where any one is placed.
In station like the herald, Mercury,
New-lighted on a heav'n-kissing hill. Shakspeare's Timon.
The seditions remained within their station, which, by reason of the smallness of the beasty multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.
The planets in their station lying flood. Milton.
To single stations now what years belong.
With planets join'd, they claim another long. Greich.
4. Post assigned; office.
Michael in either hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery serpent waving behind them, and the cherubims taking their stations to guard the place. Adison.
5. Situation; position.
The fig and date, why love they to remain
In middle station and an even plain; Shakspeare's Hamlet.
While in the lower marsh the gourd is found,
And while the hill with olive-hedge is crown'd? Prior.
6. Employment; office.
No member of a political body so mean, but it may be useful in some station or other. LeStrange.
They believe that the common use of human understanding is fitted to some station or other. Swift.
Whether those who are leaders of a party arrive at that station more by a sort of instinct, or influence of the stars, than by the possession of any great abilities, may be a point of much dispute. Swift.
7. Character; state.
Far the greater part have kept their station. Milton.
8. Rank; condition of life.
I can be contented with an humbler station in the temple of virtue, than to be set on the pinnacle. Dryden.
TO STATION. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a certain post, rank, or place.
STATIONARY. adj. [from statuere.] Fixed; not progressive.
The same harmony and stationary constitution, as it happened in many species, so doth it fall out in individuals. Brown.
Between the descent and ascent, where the image seem'd stationary, I stopped the prism, and fixed it in that posture, that it should be moved no more. Newton's Opt.
STATIONER. n. f. [from station.]
1. A bookseller.
Some modern tragedies are beautiful on the stage, and yet Tryphon the stationer complains they are seldom asked for in his shop. Dryden.
With authors, stationers obey'd the call;
Glory and gain th' industrious tribe provoke,
And gentle dulness ever loves a joke. Pope's Dunciad.
2. A seller of paper.
STATIST. n. f. [from statuere.] A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government.
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baliness to write fair; and labour'd much. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
How to forget that learning. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
I do believe, that this shall prove a war. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
Their orators then extoll'd, as those
The top of eloquence, statists indeed, Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
And lovers of their country. Milton's Paradise Reg.

STA

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.
STATUE. n. f. [from statuere, French; from statuere, Latin.]
1. The art of carving images or representations of life.
The northern nations, that overwhelmed it by their numbers, were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of architecture and statuary. Temple.
2. One that practises or professes the art of making statues.
On other occasions the statuaries took their subjects from the poets. Adison.
How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit and cheerfulness, when he considers that he will be read with pleasure but a very few years?
This is like employing an excellent statuary to work upon mouldering stone. Swift.
STATUE. n. f. [from statuere, French; statua, Latin.] An image; a solid representation of any living being.
The princes heard of her mother's statue; a piece many years in doing, and now newly perform'd by that rare Italian master. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Stard each on other. Shakspeare's Richard III.
Architects propounded unto Alexander to cut the mountain Athos into the form of a statue, which in his right hand should hold a town capable of containing ten thousand men, and in his left a vessel to receive all the water that flowed from the mountain. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
A statue of Polydorus, called the rule, deserves that name for having so perfect an agreement in all its parts, that it is not possible to find a fault in it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
TO STATUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place as a statue.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And were there sense in his idolatry.
My substance should be statu'd in thy stead. Shakspeare.
STATUURE. n. f. [from statuere, French; statuura, Latin.] The height of any animal.
What statuure we attain at seven years we sometimes double,
most times come short of at one and twenty. Brown.
A creature who might erect
His statuure, and upright with front serene ion stand?
Govern the rest. Milton.
Foreign men of mighty statuure came. Dryden.
Thyself but dust, thy statuure but a span;
A moment thy duration, foolish man!
We have certain demonstration from Egyptian mummies, and Roman urns and rings, and measures and edifices, and many other antiquities, that human statuure has not diminished for above two thousand years. Bentley's Sermons.
STATUTABLE. adj. [from statuere.] According to statute.
I met with one who was three inches above five feet; the statutable measure of that club. Adison's Guardian.
STATUTE. n. f. [from statuere, French; statutum, Latin.] A law;
an edict of the legislature.
Not only the common law, but also the statutes and acts of parliament were specially intended for its benefit. Spenser.
Blood hath been shed,
Ere human statute purg'd the gen'ral weal. Shakspeare.
There was a statute against vagabonds; wherein note the distike the parliament had of goaling them as chargeable and pestiferous. Bacon.
Know the statutes of heaven and laws of eternity, those immutable rules of justice. Tillotson's Sermons.
O queen, indulg'd by favour of the gods,
To build a town, with statutes to refrain
The wild inhabitant beneath thy reign. Dryden's Æneid.
TO STAVE. v. a. In the plural staves, [from staf.]
1. To break in pieces; used originally of batrels made of small parts or staves.
If irreverent expression, or a thought too wanton are crept into my verses, let them be stav'd or forfeited like contrabanded goods. Dryden.
2. To push off as with a staff.
How can they escape the contagion of the writings, whom the virulency of the calumnies have not staved off, from reading. Ben. Johnson.
The condition of a servant staves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but allurements, attraction, and invitation. South's Sermons.
3. To pour out by breaking the cask.
The feared disorders that might ensue thereof have been an occasion that divers times all the wine in the city hath been staved. Sandys's Travels.
4. To furnish with rundles or staves.
This was the shameful end of Aloysius Criticus, Solymans deputy in Hungary; who climbing too fast up the evil staved ladder of ambition, suddenly fell, and never rose more. Knollet.
TO STAVE. v. n. To fight with staves.
Equal shame and envy stir'd
IV P th' enemy, that one thou'd beard
So many warriours, and so stout,
As he had done, and staved it out. Hadibras.
TO STAVE AND TAIL. v. a. To part dogs by interposing a staff,
and by pulling the tail.

Equal shame and envy stir'd
IV P th' enemy, that one thou'd beard
So many warriours, and so stout,
As he had done, and staved it out. Hadibras.
TO STAVE AND TAIL. v. a. To part dogs by interposing a staff,
and by pulling the tail.

The conquering foe they soon assail'd.
First Trulla flav'd, and Cerdon tail'd.
STAVES. n. f. The plural of staff.
All in strange manner arm'd,
Some rustick knives, some staves in fire warm'd. Fairy Qu.
They tie tassels up in bundles or staves. Mortimer's Husband.
STAVESCRE. n. f. Larkspur. A plant.
To STAY. v. n. [from stay, Dutch.]
1. To continue in a place; to forbear departure.
Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If he do bid me pack, I'll give her thanks.
As though she bid me stay by her a week. Shakespeare.
Would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands?
Not after resurrection shall he stay.
Longer on earth than certain times t'appear. Milton.
He did ordain that as many might depart as would; but as many as would stay should have very good means to live from the state. Bacon.
They flocked in such multitudes, that they not only stayed for their resort, but discharged divers. Huyward.
Th' injur'd sea, which from her wonted place,
To gain some acres, avarice did force,
If the new banks neglected once decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.
Stay, I command you, stay and hear me first. Dryden.
Nor must he stay at home, because he must be back again by one and twenty. The father cannot stay any longer. Locke.
Every plant has its atmosphere, which hath various effects on those who stay near them. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Servants sent on messages stay out longer than the message requires. Swift.
2. To continue in a state.
The flames augment, and stay
At their full height, then languish to decay. Dryden.
3. To wait; to attend.
I'll tell thee my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us. Shakespeare.
We for his royal presence only stay. Dryden.
To end the rites,
I stay for Turnus, whose devoted head
Is owing to the living and the dead;
My son and I expect it from his hand. Dryden.
4. To stop; to stand still.
When the list pour out her larger spright,
She would command the hasty sun to stay,
Or backward turn his course. Fairy Queen.
Perkin Warbeck, finding that when matters once go down the hill, they stay not without a new force, resolved to try some exploit upon England. Bacon.
Satan
Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel,
Nor stay'd, till on Niphates' top he lights. Milton.
5. To dwell; to be long.
Nor will I stay
On Amphix, or what death he dealt that day. Dryden.
I must stay a little on one action, which preferred the relief of others to the consideration of yourself. Dryden.
6. To rest confidently.
Because ye trust in oppression, and stay thereon, this shall be as a breach ready to fall. Isa. xxx. 12.
They call themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon God. Isa. xlviii. 2.
To STAY. v. a.
1. To stop; to withhold; to repress.
All that may stay their minds from thinking that true which they heartily wish were false, but cannot think it so without some scruple. Hooker.
The Syrens sang to allure them into danger; but Orpheus sang so well that he staid them. Raleigh's History of the World.
He took nothing but a bit of bread to stay his stomach. Locke.
To stay these sudden gusts of passion
That hurry you from reason, rest assur'd
The secret of your love lives with me only.
Stay her stomach with these half hundred plays, till I can procure her a romance big enough to satisfy her great soul with adventures. Pope.
Why cease we then the wrath of heaven to stay? Pope.
2. To delay; to obstruct; to hinder from progression.
The joyous time will not be stay'd.
Unless he do him by the forelock take. Spenser.
Your ships are staid at Venice. Shakespeare.
Unto the shore, with tears, with sighs, with moan,
They him conduct; curling the bounds that stay
Their willing fleets, that would have further gone. Daniel.
I will bring thee where no shadow stays.
Thy coming, and thy soft embraces. Milton's Paradise Lost.
I was willing to stay my reader on an argument that appears to me new. Locke.

3. To keep from departure.
If as a prisoner I were here, you might Have then insisted on a conqueror's right,
And stay'd me here. Dryden.
4. [from stay, French.] To prop; to support; to hold up.
On this determination we might stay ourselves without further proceeding herein. Hooker.
Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side and the other on the other. Exod. xvii. 12.
Sallows and reeds for vineyards useful found,
To stay thy vines. Dryden.
STAY. n. f. [from stay, French.]
1. Continuance in a place; forbearance of departure.
Determine.
Or for her stay or going; the affair cries haste. Shakespeare.
Should judges make a longer stay in a place than usually they do; a day more in a county would be a very good addition. Bacon.
Her long with ardent look his eye purfu'd,
Delighted I but desired more her stay. Milton.
The Thracian youth invades
Orpheus returning from th' Elysian shades, Embrace the hero, and his stay implore. Waller.
So long a stay will make
The jealous king suspect we have been plotting. Denham.
What pleasure hop'st thou in my stay?
When I'm constrain'd and with myself away. Dryden.
When the wine sparkles,
Make haste, and leave thy business and thy care,
No mortal interest can be worth thy stay. Dryden.
2. Stand; cessation of progression.
Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay; teeth stand at a stay, except their wearing.
Affairs of state seem'd rather to stand at a stay, than to advance or decline.
Made of sphere-metal, never to decay,
Until his revolution was at stay. Milton.
Almighty crowd! thou shorten'st all dispute;
Nor faith nor reason make thee at a stay,
Thou leap'st o'er all. Dryden's Mahab.
3. A stop; an obstruction; a hindrance from progress.
His fell heart thought long that little way,
Griev'd with each step, tormented with each stay. Fairfax.
4. Rest; aint; prudence; caution.
Many just and temperate provisos, well shewed and foretokened the wisdom, stay and moderation of the king. Bacon.
With prudent stay he long deserv'd
The rough contention. Philips.
5. A fixed state.
Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works though toughly labour'd will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay.
Or early and late twilights to mid-day. Dennis.
Alas, what stay is there in human state!
And who can shun inevitable fate? Dryden.
6. A prop; a support.
Obedience of creatures unto the law of nature is the stay of the whole world.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
What this was once a king, and now is clay. Shakespeare.
My only strength, and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me?—where subsist?
Trees serve as so many stays for their vines, which hang like garlands from tree to tree. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
7. Tackling. [See STAYS.]
With stays and cordage last he rig'd a ship, immoveable. Spenser's State of Ireland.

2. Constant; resolute.
I hope her stubborn heart to bend,
And that it then more steadfast will endure. Spenser.
A generation that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not steadfast with God. Psalm lxxviii. 8.
Be faithful to thy neighbour in his poverty; abide steadfast unto him in the time of his trouble. Ecclesi. xxii. 23.
Hum resist steadfast in the faith. 1 Pet. v. 9.

What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with steadfast sight
Cou'd view the furies mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep? Dryden.
STEADFASTLY. adv. [from steadfast.] Firmly; constantly.
God's omniscience steadfastly grasps the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South's Sermons.
In general, steadfastly believe that whatever God hath revealed is infallibly true. Wals's Preparation for Death.
STEADFASTNESS. n. f. [from steadfast.]
1. Immutability; fixedness.
So hard these heavenly beauties be enfir'd,
As things divine, least passions do impress,
The more of steadfast minds to be admir'd. Spenser.
The more they stayed be on steadfastly, no more. Spenser.
2. Firmness; constancy; resolution.
STEADILY. adv. [from steadfast.]

dered by some accident which no man can steadfastly build upon. South's Sermons.
2. Without variation or irregularity.
So steadfastly does fickle fortune steer
Th' obedient orb that it should never err. Blackmore.
STEADINESS. n. f. [from steadfast.]
1. State of being not tottering nor easily shaken.
2. Firmness; constancy.
John got the better of his cholerick temper, and wrought himself up to a great steadiness of mind, to pursue his interest through all impediments.
3. Consistent unvaried conduct.
Steadiness is a point of prudence as well as of courage. L'Estr.
A friend is useful to form an undertaking, and secure stead- iness of conduct. Collier's Friendship.
STEADY. adj. [from stead, Saxon.]
1. Firm; fixed; not tottering.
Their feet steady, their hands diligent, their eyes watchful, and their hearts resolute. Sidney.
He fails 'tween worlds and worlds with steady wing. Mil.
Steer the bounding bark with steady toil,
When the storm thickens and the billows boil. Pope.
2. Not wavering; not fickle; not changeable with regard to resolution or attention.
Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadfast thoughts have search'd in vain. Milton.
Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have, by the blessing of God, overcome all difficulties. Dryden's Æneid.
A clear sight keeps the understanding steady. Locke.
STEAK. n. f. [from stæck, Swedish, a piece; stæck, Swedish,

Saxon, stelan, Dutch.]
1. To take by theft; to take clandestinely; to take without right.
To steal generally implies secrecy, to rob, either secrecy or violence.
Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my loves,
And stole away the ladies hearts of France. Shakespeare.
There are some shrewd contents in yon same paper,
That steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek;
Some dear friend dead. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
How should we steal silver or gold? Gen. xlv. 8.
A schoolboy finding a bird's nest, shews it his companion and he steals it. Shakespeare.
2. To withdraw or convey without notice.
The law of England never was properly applied to the Irish,
by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage and submission. Spenser.
Let us shift away, there's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left. Shakespeare.
Variety of objects has a tendency to steal away the mind from its steady pursuit of any subject. Watts.

peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with splinters. Raleigh.

3. Secret act; clandestine practice. By stealth means secretly; clandestinely; with desire of concealment: but, like steal, is often used in a good sense.

The wisdom of the same spirit borrowed from melody that pleasure, which mingled with heavenly mysteries, caught the smoothness and softness of that which toucheth the ear, to convey as it were by stealth the treasure of good things into man's mind. Heater.

I feel this youth's perfections,
With an invisible and subtle stealth,
To creep in at mine eyes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Hang o'er their couriers' heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

STEEL. n. f. [from stēal, Dutch.]

1. Steel is a kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red-hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, or other substances that abound in the phlogiston, for several hours in a close furnace. It may also be made by fusion, and several other ways; but they are greatly in the wrong who prefer steel to iron for medicinal purposes. Hill's Mat. Addita.

At her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stuff'd with steel-headed darts wherewith the quell'd
The savage beats in her victorious play. Fairy Queen.

With mighty bars of long enduring brass
The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties. Fairy Queen.

A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon's Natural History.

Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not readily strike fire with steel, much less with one another; nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet; the sparks being then quenched in their eruption. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought to pure
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2. It is often used metonymically for weapons or armour.

Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his passage till he had fac'd the slave. Shakespeare.

A grove of oaks,
Whose polish'd steel from far severely shines,
Are not so dreadful as this beauteous queen. Dryden.

He sudden as the word,
In proud Ptolemy's bosom plunged the sword;
Toxus amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antacid. Boerhaave.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness; as heads of steel.

STEEP. n. f. Precipice; ascent or descent approaching to per-pendicularity.

As that Theban monster that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and fight
Cast herself headlong from the Iliacian steep. Milton.

As high turrets for their airy steep
Require foundations, in proportion deep;

And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nearer heavens they drive the root;

So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

Instructs the beast to know his native force,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly

To the next headlong steep of anarchy. Dryden.

We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steeps and precipices. Addison.

Leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,

Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep. Gay.

A poetical word for steep.

Who hath dispos'd, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steepy crags do beat. Watson.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
From steepy Ochrys' top to Pylus drove

His herd; and for his pains enjoy'd his love. Dryden.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme! Dryden.

STEER. n. f. [from stēor, Saxon; stier, Dutch.]

A young bullock.

They think themselves half exempted from law and obedience; and having once tasted freedom, do, like a steer that hath been long out of his yoke, grudge and repine ever after to come under rule again. Spenser's Ireland.

Lacaon, Neptune's priest,
With solemn pomp then sacrific'd a steer. Dryden.

Nor has the steer,

At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him. Thomson.

To STEER. v. a. [from stēor, Saxon; stieren, Dutch.] To direct; to guide in a passage.

A comely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary gray,

That with a staff his feeble steps did steer,
Left his long way his aged limbs should tire. Fairy Queen.

If a pilot cannot see the pole star it can be no fault in him to steer his course by such stars as do best appear to him. K. Ch.

To STEER. v. n. To direct a course.

As when a ship by skilful steerman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft to steers, and shifts her sail. Milton.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the fands, and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass be not that he steers by. Locke.

STEERAGE. n. f. [from steer.]

1. The act or practice of steering.

2. Direction; regulation of a course.

He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my fate. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Having got his vessel launched and set afloat, he committed the steerage of it to such as he thought capable of conducting
it. Spectator.

3. That by which any course is guided.

His costly frame
Inscrib'd to Phœbus, here he hung on high,
The steerage of his wings, and cut the sky. Dryden.

4. Regulation, or management of any thing.

You raise the honour of the peerage,
Proud to attend you at the steerage. Swift.

5. The stern or hinder part of the ship.

STEERSMATE. n. f. stier and mate, or mate.] A pilot; one who steers a ship.

STELLIONATE. n. f. [stellionatus, French; stellionatus, Latin.] A kind of crime which is committed [in law] by a deceitful selling of a thing otherwise than it really is: as, if a man should sell that for his own estate which is actually another man's.

It discerneth of crimes of stellionate, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually committed. Bacon.

STEM. n. f. [stemma, Latin.]

1. The stalk; the twig.

Two lovely berries molded on one stem,
So with two coming bodies, but one heart. Shakespeare.

After they are first shot up thirty foot in length, they spread a very large top, having no bough nor twig in the trunk or stem. Raleigh's History of the World.

Set them alope a reasonable depth, and then they will put forth many roots, and so carry more shoots upon a stem. Bacon.

This, ere it was in th' earth,
God made, and ev'ry herb, before it grew
On the green stem. Milt. Parad. Lost.

The stem thus threaten'd and the sap in thee,
Drops all the branches of that noble tree. Waller.

Farewell, you flow'rs, whose buds with early care
I watch'd, and to the cheerful sun did rear:
Who now shall bind your stems? or, when you fall,
With fountain streams your fainting souls recall? Dryden.

The low'ring Spring with lavish rain
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

2. Family; race; generation. Pedigrees are drawn in the form of a branching tree.

This is a stem
Of that victorious flock, and let us fear
His native mightiness. Shakespeare's Henry V.

I will assay her worth to celebrate,
And fo attend ye toward her glittering state;
Where ye may all, that are of noble stems, Approach. Milton.

Whoever will undertake the imperial diadem, must have of his own wherewith to support it; which is one of the reasons that it hath continued these two ages and more in that stem, now so much spoken of. Havel's Vocal Forest.

Do't thou in hounds aspire to deathless fame?
Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem. Tickell.

3. [Stammen, Swedish.] The prow or forepart of a ship.

Hear not my steps, ev'n in the hero's view,
From stem to stern, by waves was overborn. Dryden.

TO STEM. v. a. [stemma, Icelandic.] To oppose a current; to pass cross or forward notwithstanding the stream.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape
Ply, stemming nightly tow'rd the Pole. Milt. Par. Lost.

Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,
And stem the flood with their erected breasts. Denham.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage. Pope.

STENCH. n. f. [from stencan, Saxon.]

1. A stink; a bad smell.

Death, death; oh amiable and lovely death!
Thou odorous stench, found rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night. Shakesp. K. John.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives, and houses, driv'n away. Shakespeare.

Physicians by the stench of feathers cure the rising of the mother. Bacon's Nat. History.

The ministry will be found the salt of the earth, the only thing that keeps societies of men from stench and corruption. South's Sermons.

The hoary Nar,
Corrupted with the stench of sulphur flows,
And into Tiber's streams th' infected current throws. Addis.

2. I find it used once for a good smell.

Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,
And clouds of fragrant stench involve the sky. Dryden.

TO STENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make to stink.

The foulness of the ponds only stencheth the water. Mortim.

The princely eagle shrunk into a bat. Cleveland.

STENOROPHONIC. adj. [from stenos, the Homeric herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and phos, a voice.] Loudly speaking or sounding.

Of this stenorophonic horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican. Derham's Physico-Theology.

TO STEP. v. n. [strepian, Saxon; stappen, Dutch.]

1. To move by a single change of the place of the foot.

Whoever first after the troubling the water stepped in, was made whole. Job. v. 4.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace to step constantly ten yards at a time. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

2. To advance by a sudden progression.

Venidius lately
Bury'd his father, by whose death he's stepped Into a great estate. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

3. To move mentally.

When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads. Watts.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirror of that ancient world. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

4. To go; to walk.

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medallist. Addis.

5. To take a short walk.

See where he comes: so please you, step aside;
I'll know his grievance. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepped, as they said, to the next thicket-side
To bring me berries. Milton.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but just that minute stepped out. Swift's Directions to Servants.

6. To walk gravely and slowly.

Pyrius, the most ancient of all the bathways, step forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life. Kneller's History of the Turks.

When you stepped forth, how did the monster rage,
In scorn of your lost looks and tender age! Cowley.

Home the swain retreats,
His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson's Summer.

STEP. n. f. [strep, Saxon; stap, Dutch.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou found and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend
You and your ways. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden paths,
When life was hazarded in every step? Addis's Cat.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops, slain in the battle, were all set in order upon a wooden step. Kneller's History of the Turks.

In this deep forest,
The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Watts.

Those heights where William's virtue might have stood,
And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made Sublimed yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, truth lies in a well; and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace. Arbutnot on Catin.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death. 1 Sa. xx. 3.

5. Walk; passage.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their stony curse. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

Thy sea marge fertile, and rocky hard,
In very fertile years corn sown will grow to another kind. Shakespeare, Temp.

6. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered. Newton.

The querist must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise. Watts.

7. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Afrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I haisted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

9. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [Saxo, Saxon, from stapan, to deprive or make an orphan: for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chafe but misdoubt, left this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true filter, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But when the law he offered sweets refuse,
Her love the turn'd to hate. Fairy Queen.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-ey'd unto you. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false.
Cato the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of step-dame, your praclis'd art,
By which the law he offered sweets refuse,
All you have done against me, or design,
Shows your aversion, but begets not mine. Dryden, Aureng.

A step-dame too I have, a cruel she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have guessed mis to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

STEPPINGSTONE. n. f. [step and stone.] Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Like steppingstones to save a stride,
In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORACEOUS. adj. [stercoraceus, Latin.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in smell human faeces. Arbutnot on Aliments.

STERCORATION. n. f. [from stercora, Latin.] The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help to stercorating is the sheep's dung is one of the best, and next the dung of kine, and that of horses. Bacon.

Stercoration is seasonable.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the fecundity of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stercoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first germination of the seminal plant. Ray on the Creation.

STEREOGRAPHY. n. f. [stereos and graphein, Fr.] The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane. Harris.

STEREOMETRY. n. f. [stereos and metron, French.] The art of measuring all sorts of solid bodies. Harris.

STERILE. adj. [sterile, French; sterilis, Latin.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their stony curse. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

Thy sea marge fertile, and rocky hard,
In very fertile years corn sown will grow to another kind. Shakespeare, Temp.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and sterile swim. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

She is grown sterile and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More's Antidote against Atheism.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the frata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY. n. f. [sterilitas, French; sterilitas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon's War with Spain.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley's Sermons.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope's Essay on Homer.

TO STERILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward's Natural History.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STERLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated. The king's treasure of store, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon's Henry VII.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in farthings than in pounds sterling. Addison.

2. Genuine; having past the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentick. Swift's Polite Conversation.

STERLING. n. f. [sterlingum, low Lat. from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wife:
By useful observation he can tell
The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Therapist brave,
Great names, which in our rolls recorded stand,
Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,
Accents this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view. C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [stern, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical. Shakespeare, H. VI.

I would outlast the sternest eyes that look,
Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th' woods. Milt.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

My sometime general,
I've seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hardning spectacles. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.

The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustomed sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakespeare.

Did this in Caesar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cry'd, Caesar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

Then shall the war, and stern debate and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fane the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung. Dryden.

How stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil and defraud the ward. Dryden's Pers.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscribe. Shakespeare, King Lear.

STERN. n. f. [Saxon.] Of the same original with stern.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

STERNON. n. f. [sérnon.] The breast-bone.
 A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon. Wiseman.
STERNUTATION. n. f. [sternutatio, Latin.] The act of sneezing.
Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the nerves and muscles, first occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils. Quincy.
 Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
STERNUTATIVE. adj. [sternutatif, Fr. from sternuto, Latin.] Having the quality of sneezing.
STERNUTATORY. n. f. [sternutatoire, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.] Medicine that provokes to sneeze.
 Physicians, in persons near death, use sternutatories, or such medicines as provoke unto sneezing; when if the faculty arise, and sternutation ensue, they conceive hopes of life. Brown.
STEVEN. n. f. [steyen, Saxon.] A cry, or loud clamour.
 Ne sooner was out, but swifter than thought,
 Fast by the hide, the wolf Lowder caught;
 And had not Rosly renne to the stevens,
 Lowder had been slain thilke same even. Spenser.
 To STEW. v. a. [stewer, French; stoven, Dutch.]
 To seeth any thing in a slow moist heat.
 Ere I was risen from the place, that show'd
 My duty kneeling, came a reeking post, Stew'd in his haste, half breathless. Shaksp. King Lear.
 I bruil'd my skin with playing at fword and dagger with a matter of fence, three venays for a dith of stew'd prunes. Shak.
 To STEW. v. n. To be seethed in a slow moist heat.
STEW. n. f. [stewe, French; stufa, Italian; estufa, Spanish.]
 1. A bagnio; a hot-house.
 As burning Hena from his boiling stew
 Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
 And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
 Enwrap in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Fa. Queen.
 The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.
 2. A brothel; a house of prostitution. [This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licenced brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use.]
 There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor fallhood, and never brake promise. Ascham.
 My business in this state
 Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
 Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
 'Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakespeare.
 With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no curtefians. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 Her, though seven years she in the stews had laid,
 A nunnerie durst receive and think a maid
 And though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
 Midwives would swear 'twere but a tympany. Donne.
 What need'st thou for would take the park or stews,
 Who among troops of faultless nymphs can chuse? Recom.
 Making his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to infill the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children. South's Sermons.

3. [Stuven, Dutch, to store.] A storepond; a small pond where fish are kept for the table.
STEWARD. n. f. [steward, Saxon.]
 1. One who manages the affairs of another.
 There fat yclad in red,
 Down to the ground, a comely personage,
 That in his hand a white rod managed;
 He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,
 And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Fa. Queen.
 Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. Shak. Timon.
 Take on you the charge
 And kingly government of this your land;
 Not as protector, steward, substitute,
 Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shaksp. Richard III.
 How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward. Lu. xvi.
 When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice.
 What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency than to confide, that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives? Swift.
 2. An officer of state.
 The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
 To be high steward. Shakespeare.
STEWARDSHIP. n. f. [from steward.] The office of a steward.
 The earl of Worcester
 Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship. Shaksp. R. II.
 Shew us the hand of God
 That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship. Shaksp.
 If they are not employed to such purposes, we are false to our trust, and the stewardship committed to us, and shall be one day severely accountable to God for it. Calamy's Sermons.
STIBIAL. adj. [from stibium, Latin.] Antimonial.
 The former depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy, and the latter upon an adulst stibial or eruginous sulphur. Haro.
STYCADOS. n. f. [sticadus, Latin.] An herb. Asclepiad.
STYCK. n. f. [stycca, Saxon; stycco, Italian; stick, Dutch.] A piece of wood small and long.
 Onions as they hang will shoot forth, and so will the herb orpin, with which in the country they trim their houses, binding it to a lath or stick set against a wall. Bacon's Nat. History.
 Some strike from clashing flints their fiery fire,
 Some gather sticks the kindled flames to feed. Dryden.
 To STICK. v. a. preterite stuck; participle pass. stuck. [stican, Saxon.] To fasten on so as that it may adhere.
 Two troops in fair array one moment shov'd;
 The next, a field with fallen bodies strow'd;
 The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
 The steeds without their riders scour the field,
 The knights unhors'd. Dryden.
 Would our ladies, instead of sticking on a patch against their country, sacrifice their necklaces against the common enemy, what decrees ought not to be made in their favour?
 Oh for some pedant reign,
 Some gentle James to bless the land again;
 To stick the doctor's chair unto the throne,
 Give law to words, or war with words alone. Pope.
 To STICK. v. n.
 1. To adhere; to unite itself by its tenacity or penetrating power.
 I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales. Es.
 The green caterpillar breedeth in the inward parts of roses not blown, where the dew sticks. Bacon.
 Though the sword be put into the sheath, we must not suffer it there to rust, or stick so fast as that we shall not be able to draw it readily, when need requires. Rolfe.
 2. To be inseparable; to be united with any thing. Generally in an ill sense.
 Now does he feel
 His secret murders sticking on his hands. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 He is often stigmatized with it, as a note of infamy, to stick by him whilst the world lasteth. Sanderon.
 In their quarrels they proceed to calling names, 'till they light upon one that is sure to stick. Swift.
 3. To rest upon the memory painfully.
 The going away of that which had staid so long, doth yet stick with me. Bacon's Natural History.
 4. To flop; to lose motion.
 I shudder at the name!
 My blood runs backward, and my fault's tongue
sticks at the found. Smith's Phœdra and Hippolitus.
 5. To resist emission.
 Wherefore could I not pronounce amen?
 I had most need of blessings, and amen
stuck in my throat. Shaksp. Macbeth.

6. To be constant; to adhere with firmness.
 The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out, he is true bred. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 The first contains a sticking fast to Christ, when the Christian profession is persecuted; and the second a rising from sin, as he rose, to a new Christian life. Hannond.
 Some stick to you, and some to other side. Dryden.
 They could not but conclude, that to be their interest, being so convinced, pursue it and stick to it. Tillotson.
 The advantage will be on our side, if we stick to its essentials. Addison's Freeholder.
 7. To be troublesome by adhering.
 I am fatisht to trifle away my time, rather than let it stick by me. Pope's Letters.
 8. To remain; not to be lost.
 Proverbial sentences are formed into a verse, whereby they stick upon the memory. Watts.
 9. To dwell upon; not to forsake.
 If the matter be knotty, the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and not leave it till it has mastered the difficulty. Locke.
 Every man, besides occasional affections, has beloved studies which the mind will more closely stick to. Locke.
 10. To cause difficulties or scruple.
 This is the difficulty that sticks with the most reasonable of those who, from conscience, refuse to join with the Revolution. Swift.
 11. To scruple; to hesitate.
 It is a good point of cunning for a man to shape the answer he would have in his own words and propositions; for it makes the other party stick the less. Bacon.
 The church of Rome, under pretext of expolition of Scripture, doth not stick to add and alter. Bacon.
 Rather than impute our miscarriages to our own corruptions,
 we do not stick to arraign providence itself. L'Estrange.
 Every one without hesitation supposes eternity, and sticks not to ascribe infinity to duration. Locke.
 That two bodies cannot be in the same place is a truth that no body any more sticks at, than at this maxim, that it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be. Locke.
 To stick at nothing for the publick interest is represented as the refined part of the Venetian wisdom. Addison on Italy.
 Some stick not to say, that the parson and attorney forged a will. Arbutnot.
 12. To be stopped; to be unable to proceed.
 If we should fail.
 — We fail!
 But screw your courage to the sticking place,
 And we'll not fail. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 They never doubted the commons; but heard all stuck in the lords house, and desired the names of those who hindered the agreement between the lords and commons. Clarendon.
 He threw: the trembling weapon pass'd
 Through nine bull-hides, each under other plac'd
 On his broad shield, and stuck within the last. Dryden.
 13. To be embarrassed; to be puzzled.
 Where they stick, they are not to be farther puzzled by putting them upon finding it out themselves. Locke.
 They will stick long at part of a demonstration, for want of perceiving the connexion of two ideas, that, to one more exercised, is as visible as any thing. Locke.
 Souls a little more capacious can take in the connexion of a few propositions; but if the chain be prolix, here they stick and are confounded. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
 14. To STICK out. To be prominent with deformity.
 His flesh is consumed away that it cannot be seen, and his bones that were not seen stick out. Job xxxiii. 21.
 15. To STICK out. To be unemployed.
 To STICK. v. a. [stican, Saxon; stiken, Dutch.]
 1. To stab; to pierce with a pointed instrument.
 The Hermit, when their old kindred fell sick, stuck them with a dagger. Grev.
 2. To fix upon a pointed body.
 3. To fasten by transfixion.
 Her death!
 I'll stand betwixt: it first shall pierce my heart:
 We will be stuck together on his dart. Dryd. Tyrant Love.
 4. To set with something pointed.
 A lofty pile they rear;
 The fabrick's front with cypress twigs they strew,
 And stick the sides with boughs of baleful yew. Dryden.
STICKINESS. n. f. [from stick.] Adhesive quality; viscosity;
 glutinousness; tenacity.
 To STICKLE. v. n. [from the practice of prizefighters, who placed seconds with staves or sticks to interpose occasionally.]
 1. To take part with one side or other.
 Fortune, as she's wont, turn'd stickle,
 And for the foe began to stickle. Hudibras.
 2. To contest; to altercation; to contend rather with obstinacy than vehemence.
 Let them go to't, and stickle,
 Whether a conclave, or a conventicle. Cleveland.

- Heralds stickle, who got who,
 So many hundred years ago. Hudibras.
 3. To trim; to play fast and loose; to act a part between opposites.
 When he sees half of the Christians killed, and the rest in a fair way of being routed, he stickles betwixt the remainder of God's host and the race of fiends. Dryden's Jew. Dedication.
STICKLEBAG. n. f. [Properly stickleback, from stick, to prick.]
 The smallest of fresh-water fish.
 A little fish called a sticklebag, without scales, hath his body fenced with several prickles. Watson's Angler.
STICKLER. n. f. [from stickle.]
 1. A fideleman to fencers; a second to a duellist; one who stands to judge a combat.
 Balilius came to part them, the stickler's authority being unable to persuade cholerick hearers; and part them he did. Sidon.
 Balilius, the judge, appointed sticklers and trampets, whom the others should obey. Sidon.
 Our former chiefs, like sticklers of the war,
 First fought to inflame the parties, then to poise:
 The quarrel lov'd, but did the cause abhor;
 And did not strike to hurt, but made a noise. Dryden.
 2. An obstinate contender about anything.
 Quercetanus, though the grand stickler for the tria prima, has this conception of the irresolubleness of diamonds. Boyle.
 The inferior tribe of common women have, in most reigns, been the professed sticklers for such as have acted against the true interest of the nation. Addison's Freeholder.
 The tory or high church clergy were the greatest sticklers against the exorbitant proceedings of king James II. Swift.
 All place themselves in the list of the national church, though they are great sticklers for liberty of conscience. Swift.
STICKY. adj. [from stick.] Viscous; adhesive; glutinous.
 Herbs which last longest are those of strong smell and with a sticky stalk. Bacon's Natural History.
STIFF. adj. [stey, Saxon; stiff, Danish; styf, Swedish; stijf, Islandic; stijf, Dutch.]
 1. Rigid; inflexible; resisting flexure; not flaccid; not limber; not easily flexible; not pliant.
 They rising on stiff pinions tower
 The mid aerial sky. Milton.
 The glittering robe
 Hung floating loose, or stiff with mazy gold. Thomson.
 2. Not soft; not giving way; not fluid; not easily yielding to the touch.
 Still less and less my boiling spirits flow;
 And I grow stiff as cooling metals do. Dryd. Indian Emp.
 Mingling with that oily liquor, they were wholly incorporates, and so grew more stiff and firm, making but one substance. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 3. Strong; not easily resisted.
 On a stiff gale
 The Theban swan extends his wings. Denham.
 4. Hardy; stubborn; not easily subdued.
 How stiff is my vile sense,
 That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling
 Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distracted! Shakespeare.
 5. Obstinate; pertinacious.
 We neither allow unmeet nor purpose the stiff defence of any unnecessary custom heretofore received. Hobbes.
 Yield to others when there is cause; but it is a shame to stand stiff in a foolish argument. Taylor.
 A war ensues, the Cretans own their cause,
Stiff to defend their hospitable laws. Dryden.
 6. Harsh; not written with ease; constrained.
 7. Formal; rigorous in certain ceremonies; not disengaged in behaviour; starched; affected.
 The French are open, familiar, and talkative; the Italians stiff, ceremonious, and reserved. Addison on Italy.
 8. In Shakespeare it seems to mean strongly maintained, or affected with good evidence. Shakespeare.
 This is stiff news.
 To STIFFEN. v. a. [steyan, Saxon.]
 1. To make stiff; to make inflexible; to make unpliant.
 When the blast of war blows in our ears,
 Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
 Disguise fair nature with hard favour'd rage. Shaksp. H. V.
 He stiffen'd his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the Lord. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13.
 The poor, by them discrobed, naked lie,
 Veil'd with no other covering but the sky;
 Expos'd to stiff'ning frosts, and drenching showers,
 Which thicken'd air from her black bosom pours. Sandys.
 Her eyes grow stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn. Dryden.
 2. To make obstinate.
 Her stiff'ning grief,
 Who saw her children slaughter'd all at once,
 Was dull to mine. Dryden and Lee.
 To STIFFEN. v. n.
 1. To grow stiff; to grow rigid; to become unpliant.
 Aghast, astonish'd, and struck dumb with fear,
 I stood; like bristles rose my stiff'ning hair. Dryden.

- Fix'd in astonishment I gaze upon thee,
Like one just blasted by a stroke from heaven;
Who pants for breath, and stiffens yet alive;
In dreadful looks, a monument of wrath. Addison's Cato.
2. To grow hard; to be hardened.
The tender soil, then stiffening by degrees,
Shut from the bounded earth the bounding seas. Dryden.
3. To grow less susceptible of impression; to grow obstinate.
Some souls, we see,
Grow hard and stiffen with adversity. Dryden.
- STIFFHEADED, adj. [stiff and heart.] Obstinate; stubborn; contumacious.
They are impudent children, and stiffhearted. Ezek. ii.
- STIFFLY, adv. [from stiff.] Rigidly; inflexibly; stubbornly.
In matters divine, it is still maintained stiffly, that they have no stiffnecked force. Hooker.
- I commended them that stood so stiffly for the Lord, & Esdras.
The Indian fig of itself multiplieth from root to root, the plenty of the sap and the softness of the stalk making the bough, being overloaden and not stiffly upheld, to weigh down. Bacon.
- STIFFNECKED, adj. [stiff and neck.] Stubborn; obstinate; contumacious.
An infinite charge to her majesty, to send over such an army as should tread down all that standeth before them on foot, and lay on the ground all the stiffnecked. Spenser.
- This stiffnecked pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-blown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.
- STIFFNESS, n. f. [from stiff.]
1. Rigidity; inflexibility; hardness; ineptitude to bend.
The stiffness and dryness of iron to melt, must be holpen by moistening or opening it. Bacon.
- The willow bows and recovers, the oak is stubborn and inflexible; and the punishment of that stiffness is one branch of the allegory. L'Estrange.
2. Ineptitude to motion.
The pillars of this frame grow weak,
My sinews slacken, and an icy stiffness
Benumbs my blood. Denham.
3. Tension; not laxity.
To try new shrouds, one mounts into the wind,
And one below, their ease or stiffness notes. Dryden.
4. Obstinate; stubbornness; contumaciousness.
The vices of old age have the stiffness of it too; and as it is the unfittest time to learn in, so the unfittest of it to unlearn will be found much greater. South's Sermons.
- Firmness or stiffness of the mind is not from adherence to truth, but submission to prejudice. Locke.
- These hold their opinions with the greatest stiffness; being generally the most fierce and firm in their tenets. Locke.
5. Unpleasing formality; constraint.
All this religion sat easily upon him, without any of that stiffness and constraint, any of those forbidding appearances which disparage the actions of the sincerely pious. Atterbury.
6. Rigorously; harshness.
There fill yourself with those most joyous sights;
But speak no word to her of these sad plights,
Which her too constant stiffness doth constrain. Spenser.
7. Manner of writing, not easy but harsh and constrained.
Rules and critical observations improve a good genius, where nature leadeth the way, provided he is not too scrupulous; for that will introduce a stiffness and affectation, which are utterly abhorrent from all good writing. Felton.
- TO STIFFLE, v. a. [stiffler, French.]
1. To oppress or kill by closeness of air; to suffocate.
Where have you been broiling?
—Among the crowd i' th' abbey, where a finger
Cou'd not be wedg'd in more; I am stifled. Shakespeare.
- With the mere rankness of their joy,
Pray'r against his absolute decree,
No more avails than breath against the wind;
Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth. Milton.
- That part of the air that we drew out, left the more room for the stifling steams of the coals to be received into it. Boyle.
- Stifled* with kisses a sweet death he dies. Dryden.
- At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to stifle them with care; and all on a sudden, the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.
- I took my leave, being half stifled with the closeness of the room. Swift's Account of Partridge's Death.
2. To keep in; to hinder from emission.
Whilst bodies become coloured by reflecting or transmitting this or that sort of rays more copiously than the rest, they stop and stifle in themselves the rays which they do not reflect or transmit. Newton's Opticks.
3. To extinguish by hindering communication.
4. To extinguish by artful or gentle means.
5. Every reasonable man will pay a tax with cheerfulness for stifling a civil war in its birth. Addison's Freeholder.
6. To suppress; to conceal.
If't prove thy fortune, Polydore, to conquer,
Trust me, and let me know thy love's success,
That I may ever after stifle mine. Orway's Orphan.

- STILETTO, n. f. [Italian; stilet, Fr.] A small dagger, of which the blade is not edged but round, with a sharp point.
When a senator should be torn in pieces, he hired one, who entering into the senate-house, should assault him as an enemy to the state; and stabbing him with stilettes leave him to be torn by others. Hakewill on Providence.
- TO STILL, v. a. [stillan, Sax. stillen, Dutch.]
1. To silence; to make silent.
Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes. Shak.
2. To quiet; to appease.
In all refrainings of anger, it is the best remedy to make a man's self believe, that the opportunity of revenge is not yet come; but that he foresees a time for it, and so to still himself in the mean time, and reserve it. Bacon.
3. To make motionless.
He having a full sway over the water, had power to still and compose it, as well as to move and disturb it. Woodward.
- The third fair morn now blaz'd upon the main,
Then glassy smooth lay all the liquid plain,
The winds were hush'd, the billows scarcely curl'd,
And a dead silence still'd the watry world. Pope.
- STILL, adj. [stil, Dutch.]
1. Silent; uttering no noise. It is well observed by Junius that si is the found commanding silence.
We do not act, that often jest and laugh;
'Tis old but true, still swine eat all the draught. Shak.
- Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honours Demuring upon me. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
- The storm was laid, the winds retir'd,
Obedient to thy will;
The sea that roar'd at thy command,
At thy command was still. Addison.
2. Quiet; calm.
Atin when he spied
Thus in still waves of deep delight to wade,
Fiercely approaching to him loudly cry'd,
From hence my lines and I depart,
I to my soft still walks, they to my heart;
I to the nurse, they to the child of art.
Religious pleasure moves gently, and therefore constantly.
It does not affect by rapture, but is like the pleasure of health, which is still and sober. South's Sermons.

To STING. v. a. Preterite, I stung, participle passive stung, and stung. [Jrangan, Saxon; stungen, fore pricked, Islandick.]

1. To pierce or wound with a point darted out, as that of wasps or scorpions.

The snake, rolled in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shakespeare.
That snakes and vipers sting and transmit their mischief by the tail is not easily to be justified, the poison lying about the teeth and communicated by the bite. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To pain acutely.
His unkindness
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear right,
To his doghearted daughters: these things sting him
So venomously, that burning flame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare.

To prove the hero—Slander stings the brave. Pope.

STING. n. f. [from the verb.]

gardly; avaricious.

A stingy narrow hearted fellow that had a deal of choice fruit, had not the heart to touch it till it began to be rotten.

He relates it only by parcels, and wont give us the whole, which forces me to bespeak his friends to engage him to lay aside that stingy humour, and gratify the publick at once.

Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

To STINK. v. n. Preterite I stunk or stank. [Jerman, Saxon;
stinken, Dutch.] To emit an offensive smell, commonly a smell of putrefaction.

John, it will be stinking law for his breath. Shakespeare.

When the children of Ammon saw that they stank before David, they sent and hired Syrians. 2 Sam. x. 6.

What a fool art thou, to leave thy mother for a nasty stinking goat? L'Estrange.

Most of smells want names; sweet and stinking serve our turn for these ideas, which is little more than to call them pleasing and displeasing. Locke.

Chloris, this costly way to stink give o'er,
'Tis throwing sweet into a common thore;

Not all Arabia would sufficient be,

Thou smell'st not of thy sweets, they stink of thee. Grano.

STINK. n. f. [from the verb.] Offensive smell.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not most pernicious, but such as have some similitude with man's body, and so betray the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

They share a stink; and such proportions fall,

That, like a stink, 'tis nothing to them all. Dryden.

By what criterion do ye eat, d'ye think?

If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink. Pope.

power in such sort, that it doth not work infinitely, but correspondently unto that end for which it worketh. Hobbes.

Then hopeless, heartless, 'gan the cunning thief,
Persuade us die, to stint all further strife. Fairy Queen.

Nature wisely stints our appetites.

And craves no more than undisturb'd delight. Dryden.

I shall not go about to extenuate the latitude of the curse upon the earth, or stint it only to the production of weeds, but give it its full scope in an universal diminution of the fruitfulness of the earth.

A suppos'd heathen deity might be so poor in his attributes, so stinted in his knowledge, that a Pagan might hope to conceal his perjury from his notice. Addison.

Few countries, which, if well cultivated, would not support double their inhabitants, and yet fewer where one child are not extremely stinted in necessities. Swift.

STINT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Limit; bound; restraint.

We must come at the length to some pause: for if every thing were to be desired for some other without any stint, there could be no certain end propo'd unto our actions, we should go on we know not whither. Hobbes.

Touching the stint or measure thereof, rites and ceremonies, and other external things of the like nature being hurtful unto the church, either in respect of their quality, or in regard of their number; in the former there could be no doubt or difficulty what would be done; their deliberation in the latter was more difficult. Hobbes.

The exterior of mourning, a decent funeral, and black habits are the usual stints of common husbands. Dryden.

2. A proportion; a quantity assigned.

Our stint of woe

Is common; every day, a sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant
Have just our theme of woe. Shakespeare.

He that gave the hint,
This letter for to print,
Must also pay the stint. Denham.

How much wine drink you in a day? my stint in company is a pint at noon. Swift.

STIPEND. n. f. [from stipendium, Latin.] Wages; settled pay.

All the earth,

Her kings and tetrarchs are their tributaries;
People and nations pay them hourly stipends. Ben. Johnson.

necessity as no man ever denied. Bp. Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldier, miserable stir,

Why all these words, this clamour and this stir,

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day? Denham.

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain or make a stir. South's Sermons.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humours. Glanville.

After all this stir about them they are good for nothing. Til.

STOCCADO. n. f. [From stocco, from stocco, a rapier, Italian.] A thrust with the rapier.

I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier. — You stand on distance, your paces, stoccado's, and I know not what.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

STOCK. n. f. [From stoc, Saxon; stock, Dutch; estoc, French.]

1. The trunk; the body of a plant.

That furious beast
His precious horn, fought of his enemies,
Strikes in the stock, ne thence can be releas'd.
Fa. Queen.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again, though the root wax old in the earth, and the stock die in the ground.
Job xiv. 8.

2. The trunk into which a graft is inserted.
The cion over-rueth the stock quite; and the stock is but passive only, and giveth aliment but no motion to the graft.

As fruits, ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stocks inserted, learn to bear;
The surest virtues thus from passions shoot,
Wild nature's vigour working at the root.
Pope.

3. A log; a post.
That they kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipp'd stocks and stones,
Forget not.

Why all this fury? What's the matter,
That oaks must come from Thrace to dance?
Must stupid stocks be taught to flatter?
And is there no such wood in France?
Prior.

4. A man proverbially stupid.
What tyranny is this, my heart to thrall,
And eke my tongue with proud restraint to tie,
That neither I may speak nor think at all,
But like a stupid stock in silence die?
Spenser.

While we admire
This virtue and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stocks, nor no stocks.
Shakespeare.

5. The handle of any thing.
6. A support of a ship while it is building.

Fresh supplies of ships,
And such as fitted since the fight had been,
Or new from stocks were fall'n into the road.
Dryden.

7. [From stocco, a rapier, Italian.] A thrust; a stoccado.
To see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy punche, thy stock, thy reverie.
Shakespeare.

8. Something made of linen; a cravat; a close neckcloth. Anciently a stocken.

His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other.
Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

9. A race; a lineage; a family.
Say what stock he springs of.
Shakel. Coriolanus.

— The noble house of Marcus.
His early virtues to that ancient stock
Gave as much honour as from thence he took.
Waller.

The like shall sing
All prophecy, that of the royal stock
Of David, so I name this king, shall rise
A son, the woman's seed.
Milton.

Thou hast seen one world begin, and end,
And man, as from a second stock, proceed.
Milton.

To no human stock
We owe this fierce unkindness; but the rock,
That cloven rock produc'd thee.
Waller.

Thy mother was no goddess, nor thy stock
From Dardanus; but in some horrid rock,
Perfidious wretch, rough Caucasus thee bred.
Denham.

10. The principal; a capital store; fund already provided.
Prodigal men
Feel not their own stock wasting.
Ben. Johns. Catiline.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign; so the stock of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for then the balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

A king, against a storm, must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure.
Bacon.

'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the sons of men, upon the stock of their own interest as well as his own glory.

South.

Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe.
Dryden.

Yet was she not profuse; but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supply'd, and she not grieve,
When crouds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, the still increas'd her store;
Laid up, and spar'd, that she might give the more.
Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive;
All is the state's, the state provides for all.
Dryden's Georg.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind?
Locke.

When we brought it out it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time.

Be ready to give, and glad to distribute, by setting apart something out of thy stock for the use of some charities. Milton.

Of those stars, which our imperfect eye
Has doom'd and fix'd to one eternal sky,
Each by a native stock of honour great,
May dart strong influence, and diffuse kind heat.
Prior.

They had law-suits; but, though they spent their income, they never mortgag'd the stock.
Arbutnot.

Quantity; store; body.
A great benefit such a natural history, as may be confided in, will prove to the whole stock of learned mankind. Glauco.

Nor do those ills on single bodies prey;
But often bring the nation to decay,
And sweep the present stock and future hope away. Dryd.

He proposes to himself no small stock of fame in future ages, in being the first who has undertaken this design. Arbutnot.

12. A fund established by the government, of which the value rises and falls by artifice or chance.
An artificial wealth of funds and stocks was in the hands of those who had been plundering the public.
Swift.

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks,
Persuade and bludgeon there alike the box.
Pope.

To STOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To store; to fill sufficiently.

If a man will commit such rules to his memory, and stock his mind with portions of Scripture answerable to all the heads of duty, his conscience can never be at a loss.
South.

I, who before with shepherds in the groves,
Sung to my oaten pipe their rural loves,
Manur'd the glebe, and stock'd the fruitful plain.
Dryden.

The world begun to be stocked with people, and human industry drained those uninhabitable places.
Burnet.

Springs and rivers are by large supplies continually stocked with water.
Woodward.

2. To lay in store. See STOCKS.

3. To put in the stocks. See STOCKS.

STOMACH. n. f. [From stomach, French; stomachus, Latin.]
1. The ventricle in which food is digested.
If you're sick at sea,
Or stomach qualm'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper.
Shakel. Cymbeline.

This filthy simile, this beastly line,
Quite turns my stomach.
Pope.

2. Appetite; desire of food.
Tell me, what it's that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Shakel.

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,
Such as the poor in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach; such the rich.
Shakel. Hen. IV.

As appetite or stomach to meat is a sign of health in the body, so is this hunger in the soul a vital quality, an evidence of some life of grace in the heart; whereas decay of appetite, and the no manner of stomach, is a most desperate prognostick.
Hammond.

3. Inclination; liking.
He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart.

STOOL. n. f. [stool, Gothick; seol, Saxon; stool, Dutch.] 1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair. If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Thou fearful fool, Why takest not of the same fruit of gold? Ne sittest down on that same silver stool. To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Fa. Queen. Now which were wife, and which were fools? Poor Alma sits between two stoops. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines. There be medicines that move stoops, and not urine; some other urine, and not stoops: those that purge by stool are such as enter not at all, or little, into the mesenteric veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the guts; or else are afterwards immediately downwards to the guts; and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon's Natural History. The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts; else one would have a continual need of going to stool. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Stool of Repentance, or catty stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein who has been generally without, and the person stands therein who has been generally without, for three Sundays in the forenoon, and after sermon.

STO

sermon is called upon by name and surname, the headle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forwards to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to publick view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvas, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack or sackcloth, and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer. Unequal and unreasonable judgment of things brings many a great man to the stool of repentance. L'Estrange.

STOOLBALL. n. f. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool. While Betty dances on the green, And Susan is at stoolball seen. Prior.

To STOOP. v. n. [stropen, Saxon; stropen, Dutch.] 1. To bend down; to bend forward. Like unto the boughs of this tree he bended downward, and stooped toward the earth. Raleigh.

2. To lean forward standing or walking. When Pelopidas and Imenias were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but Imenias let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration. He stooping open'd my left side, and took From thence a rib. Milton.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit. I am the son of Henry the fifth, Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop. Shakespeare. Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long, And swept the riches of the world from far; Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong. Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity. He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry, it multiplies riches exceedingly. Boyle's Seraphick Love. Bacon.

5. To yield; to be inferior. Death his death-wound shall then receive, And stoop inglorious. Milton.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority; to condescend. They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such course of divided minds, and unmeet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon. The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour, Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milton.

8. To alight from the wing. Satan ready now To stoop with wearied wings and willing feet, On the bare outside of this world. Twelve swans behold in beauteous order move, And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden.

9. To sink to a lower place. Cowing low With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

STOOP. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Act of stooping; inclination downward. 2. Descent from dignity or superiority. Can any loyal subject see With patience such a stoop from sovereignty? An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey. Now will I wander through the air, Mount, make a stoop at ev'ry fair. An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away. L'Estrange.

4. [Scoppa, Saxon; stoope, Dutch.] A vessel of liquor. Comes, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello. There's nothing more in me, fir, but may be squeez'd out without racking, only a stoop or two of wine. A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale, On the huzzaging mob shall more prevail, Than if you give them, with the nicest art, Ragouts of peacocks brains, or filbert tart. Denham.

STOOPINGLY. adv. [from stooping.] With inclination downwards. Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoopingly, and raise himself from benches with laborious gesture. Watson.

To STOOP. v. a. [stropen, Fr. stoppere, Ital. stoppere, Dutch.] 1. To hinder from progressive motion. From the oracle They will bring all, whose spiritual counsel had Shall stoop or spur me. Can any dross find a way To stoop th' approaches of decay, And mend a ruin'd face? Shakespeare. Dorset.

STO

2. To hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse. 3. To hinder from action. As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stoop me of this boasting. 2 Cor. xi. 10.

4. To put an end to the motion or action of any thing. Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure, Whose disposition, all the world well knows, Will not be rubb'd nor stoop'd. Shakespeare, King Lear. Almon falls, pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war: Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood, And stoop'd his breath, and drank his vital blood. Dryden.

5. To stoppage. Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his confidence, and stoop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South. He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago designed. Dryden.

6. To regulate musical strings with the fingers. In instruments of strings, if you stoop a string high, whereby it hath less scope to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead. Bacon's Natural History.

7. To close any aperture. Smite every fenced city, stoop all wells of water, and mar land with stones. 2 Kings iii. 19. They pulled away the shoulder, and stooped their ears, that they should not hear. Zech. vii. 11. A hawk's bell, the holes stooped up, hang by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stoop the glass close with wax. Bacon. His majesty stooped a leak that did much harm. Bacon. Stopping; and suffocations are dangerous in the body. Bacon. They first raised an army with this design, to stoop my mouth or force my consent. King Charles. Celsus gives a precept about bleeding, that when the blood is good, which is to be judged by the colour, that immediately the vein should be stooped. Arbutnot.

8. To obstruct; to encumber. Mountains of ice that stoop th' imagin'd way. Milton.

To STOP. v. n. To cease to go forward. Some strange commotion Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts; Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground, Then lays his finger on his temple; frait Springs out into fast gait, then stoops again. Shak. H. VIII. When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stoop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke. If the rude throng pour on with furious pace, And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace, Stop short, nor struggle through. Gray.

STOP. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Cessation of progressive motion. Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. Shakespeare.

The marigold, whose courtier's face Echoes the sun, and doth unlance Her at his rise, at his full stop Packs and shuts up her gawdy shop, Mistakes her cue, and doth display. Cleveland. A lion, ranging for his prey, made a stop on a sudden at a hideous yelling noise, which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hindrance of progress; obstruction. In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stops it would make in the whole course of all mens lives and actions. These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarras of coaches near both these gates. Gravina.

My praise the Fabii claim, And thou great hero, greatest of thy name, Ordain'd in war to save the sinking state, And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden's Æn. Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected. Newton's Opt. Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and scantier. Locke. Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings, which might have ended in a reformation. Addison's Freeholder.

3. Hindrance of action. 'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action. Look you to the guard to-night: Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop, Not to outport discretion. Shakespeare.

5. Interruption. Thou art full of love and honesty, And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath; Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakespeare.

STO

6. Prohibition of sale.
If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations. Temple.
7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.
The proud Duessa, full of wrathful spite
And fierce disdain to be affronted so, Inforc'd her purple beard with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Fairy Queen.
On indeed they went: but O! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course. Daniel.
Bless'd be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South's Sermons.
So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogers.
8. Instrument by which the founts of wind music are regulated.
You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakespeare.
Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingl'd,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger,
To sound what stop the please. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
The harp
Had work; and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milt. Par. Lost.
The found
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volant touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high.
Fled, and purpos'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.
A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibias; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classical author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison on Italy.
9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.
The further a string is strained, the less supertraining goeth to a note; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all: and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.
10. The act of applying the stops in music.
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel's Civil War.
11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.
Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been afraid to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crashaw.
- STOPCOCK. n. f. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopp'd by a turning cock.
No man could spit from him without it, but would drivel like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, 'till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew.
- STOPPAGE. n. f. [stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopp'd.
The effects are a stoppage of circulation by too great a weight upon the heart, and suffocation. Arbutnot.
The stoppage of a cough, or spitting, increases phlegm in the stomach. Floyer on the Humours.
- STOPPLE, or Stopper. n. f. [stop.] That by which any hole or the mouth of any vessel is filled up.
Bottles stopp'd, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flower. Bacon.
There were no thuds or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep. Ray on the Creation.
- STORAXTREE. n. f. [styrax, Latin.]
1. A tree.
The flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a funnel, and cut into several segments, out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which is fixed like a nail in the forepart of the flower:
this afterwards becomes a roundish fleshy fruit, including one or two seeds in hard shells. Miller.
2. A resinous and odoriferous gum.
I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh, as galbanum, and sweet storax. Ecclesiast. xxiv. 15.
- STORE. n. f. [stör, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stör, Danish; stors, Islandick, is great. The Teutonic dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]
1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.
The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.

STO

- None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aereal vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when fin
With vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milt. Par. Lost.
Jove, grant me length of life, and years good store.
Heap on my bended back. Dryden's Juvenal.
2. A flock accumulated; a supply hoarded.
We liv'd
Supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryden.
Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores:
How has the oft exhausted all her store,
How oft in fields of death thy presence fought?
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought. Addison.
Their minds are richly fraught
With philosophick store. Thomson.
3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.
Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deutr. xxxii. 34.
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.
4. Storehouse; magazine.
Sulphurous and nitrous foam,
Concocted and adulter'd, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd. Milton.
- STORE. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.
What floods of treasure have flow'd into Europe by that action, so that the cause of Christendom is rais'd since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is still growing. Bacon's Holy War.
- TO STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish; to replenish.
Wife Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her pow'r with boundless joy content,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.
2. To stock against a future time.
Some were of opinion that it were best to slay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stor'd with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
One having stor'd a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.
The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.
To store the vessel let the care be mine,
With water from the rocks and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope's Odyssey.
3. To lay up; to hoard.
Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stor'd up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.
STOREHOUSE. n. f. [store and house.] Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and reposit'd against a future time.
By us it is willingly confessed, that the Scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Holker.
They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. Fairy Queen.
Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain! Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians. Gen. xli. 56.
To these high pow'rs a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan flood can wash away.
My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Paradise Reg.
The image of God was replendent in man's practical understanding, namely that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South's Sermons.
- As many different founts as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Held.
STORER. n. f. [from store.] One who lays up.
STORIED. adj. [from story.] Adorned with historical pictures.
Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale,
And love the high embow'd roof,
With antick pillar massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

STO

- Some greedy minion or imperious wife,
The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade. Pope.
- STORK. n. f. [storp, Saxon.] A bird of passage famous for the regularity of its departure.
Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and also some part of its head and thighs black: it sits for thirty days and lays but four eggs.
Formerly they would not eat the stork; but at present it is much esteemed for the deliciousness of its flesh: they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring. Cabnet.
The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jer.
STORKBILL. n. f. An herb. Answerth.
- STORM. n. f. [storm, Welsh; stroom, Saxon; storm, Dutch;
sturm, Italian.]
1. A tempest, a commotion of the elements.
O turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy storm-beat vessel safely ride.
We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakespeare.
Them she upstays, mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
From her best prop so far and storm so high.
Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm. Milton.
Then stay my child! Storms beat and rolls the main;
Oh, beat those storms and roll the seas in vain. Pope.
2. Assault on a fortified place.
How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town. Dryden.
3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bustle.
Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shakespeare.
Her sister
Began to scold and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din. Shakespeare.
4. Affliction; calamity; distress.
Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.
As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, fensively, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker.
- TO STORM. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack by open force.
From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the shaken town. Dryden.
There the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold. Pope.
- TO STORM. v. n.
1. To raise tempests.
So now he storms with many a sturdy floure,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour. Spenser.
2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.
Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they storm. Milton's Paradise Lost.
When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds, Swift.
While thus they rail, and scold, and storm,
It passes but for common form. Swift.
- STORMY. adj. [from storm.]
1. Tempestuous.
Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy found,
And with an armed winter strew the ground. Addison's Italy.
The tender apples from their parents rent
By stormy flocks, must not neglected lie. Philips.
2. Violent; passionate.
The stormy sultan rages at our stay. Irene.
- STORY. n. f. [storp, Saxon; storia, Dutch; storia, Italian;
istoria.]
1. History; account of things past.
The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn, arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren the sons of Noah. Raleigh.
Thee I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story which perhaps thou hast not heard. Milton.
To king Artaxerxes, thy servants Rathumnus the story- writer, and Smellius the scribe. Edr. ii. 17.
The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.
Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force; yet by some light miscarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found but only in the story. South's Sermons.
2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.
In the road between Bern and Soleurre, a monument erected by the republic of Bern, tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.
3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.
These fables and starts, would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Author'd by her grandame. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Their feasts, their revels, and their am'rous flames.
My maid left on the table one of her story-books, which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor servants who came to be ladies. Swift.
4. [storp, place, Saxon.] A floor; a flight of rooms.
Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, as well as irregular forms, and the contrary fault of low diffended fronts.
Watson.
- Sonnets or elegies to Chloris,

- TO STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To tell in history; to relate.
How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
This not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Story'd of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimera's and enchanted isles, a bold shoddy
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell. Milton.
It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being so big,
that no man could grasp one of them about with both his arms.
Wilkins.
Recite them, nor in erring pity fear,
To wound with storied griefs the filial ear. Pope.
2. To range one under another.
Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied according to the difference of it; any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley's Sermons.
- STORYTELLER. n. f. [story and tell.] One who relates tales;
An historian. In contempt.
In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like hers, who mis'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon.
Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious storytellers. Swift's Polite Conversation.
- STOVE. n. f. [stos, Islandick, a fire place; stovon, Saxon;
estue, French; stove, Dutch.]
1. A hot house; a place artificially made warm.
Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods, of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grotto's, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stove or sweating vaults. Woodward.
The most proper place for unction is a stove. Wiseeman.
2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.
If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove.  Evelyn.
- TO STOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificially heated.
For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon

The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowr.
Fairy Queen.
Love

STR

Love, that long since has to thy mighty pow'r
Per force subdu'd my poor captiv'd heart;
And raging now therein with restless flames,
Do't tyrannize in every weaker part.
The giant struck too mainly mercilefs;
That could have overthrown a stonny tower,
And were not heavenly grace that him did bless,
He had been pouldered all as thin as flowers.
But he was wary of that deadly flower.
STOUT. n. f. [from stout, Dutch; stolz, proud, German; stoutan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A flower champion never handled sword.
Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit;
Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more.
2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep.
He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be.
3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.

Those only friends that could not be debar'd.

4. Strong; firm.

The stout vessel to the storm gave way,
And tuck'd through loofen'd planks the rushing sea.

STOUT. n. f. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse defending drop
A dice of bread and mutton chop,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,
Surprise him with a pint of stout.

He flies and leaves the stars behind;
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stars behind.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.

STOUTNESS. n. f. [from stout] Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after.

3. Obstinate; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let widow and maid
Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear.

Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as stout heart as thou.

TO STOW. v. a. [from stow, Sax. stoa, old Frick, a place; stowen, Dutch; to lay up.] To lay up; to repose in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter?
T'ho' boldsters of the saddle-bow.

T'wo aged pistols he did stow.
Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides.

All the patriots of their ancient liberties were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines.

The goddess shov'd the vessel from the shores,
And stow'd within its womb the naval stores.

STOWAGE. n. f. [from stow.] Room for laying up.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandize of as great a value.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form, their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage.

STOWE, see. Whether singly or jointly are the same with the Saxon stow, a place.

STRA'BISM. n. f. [from strabismos, Gr. στραβισμός.] A squinting; act of looking askint.

TO STRADLE. v. n. [Supposed to come from striddle or stride.]
To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked stradling animal, with bandy legs.

TO STRAGGLE. [Of this word no etymology is known;
it is probably a frequentative of strey, from straviare, Italian, of extraviare, Latin.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay, like one that thinks to bring his friend
A mile or two, and sees the journey's end;
I straggle on too far.

out of weariness layed behind.

From straggling mountaineers for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood;
Houses to build, and them contiguous make;
For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Of straggling branches, and improve the vine, Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge that straggle too far out.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a straggling house;
Yet still he was at hand.

STRA'GLER. n. f. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lest hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars.

and the other half broken.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth.

STRAIGHT. adj. [from strak, old Dutch. It is well observed by Answorth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow strait; but for straight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak; feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in found, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines; but there is one only which is straight.

Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round.

When I see a straight staff appear crooked, while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea.

2. Narrow; close.

This should properly be strait, strait, Fr.
[See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and wear loose enough.

STRAIGHT. adv. [from strax, Danish; strack, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. This sense is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them,
I will not fend them. I will after straight.

And tell him so.
Those flinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel are not the most pernicious.

A strange proud return you may think I make you, madam, when I tell you it is not from every body I would be thus obliged.
4. Unknown; new.
Long custom had inured them to the former kind alone, by which the latter was new and strange in their ears.
Here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is to you. Shak.
Joseph saw his brethren, but made himself strange unto them.
Here passion first I felt,
Commotion strange!
5. Remote.
She makes it strange, but she would be best pleas'd
To be so anger'd with another letter.
6. Uncommonly good or bad.
This made David to admire the law of God at that strange rate, and to advance the knowledge of it above all other knowledge.
7. Unacquainted.
They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful.
STRANGE, interj. An expression of wonder.
Strange! what extremes should thus preserve the snow,
High on the Alps, or in deep caves below.
Strange! that fatherly authority should be the only original of government, and yet all mankind not know it.
TO STRANGE, v. n. [from the adjective.] To wonder; to be astonished.
Were all the assertions of Aristotle such as theology pronounceth impieties, which we strange not at from one, of whom a father said, Nec Deum coluit, nec curavit.
STRANGELY, adv. [from strange.]
1. With some relation to foreigners.
As by strange fortune
It came to us, I do in justice charge thee
That thou commend it strangely to some place,
Where chance may nurse or end it.
2. Wonderfully; in a way to cause wonder, but with a degree of dislike.
My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret farther: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne.
How strangely active are the arts of peace,
Whose restless motions less than wars do cease;
Peace is not freed from labour, but from noise;
And war more force, but not more pains, employs.
We should carry along with us some of those virtuous qualities, which we were strangely careless if we did not bring from home with us.
In a time of affliction the remembrance of our good deeds will strangely cheer and support our spirits.
STRANGENESS, n. f. [from strange.]
1. Foreignness; the state of belonging to another country.
If I will obey the Gospel, no distance of place, no strangeness of country can make any man a stranger to me.
2. Uncommunicativeness; distance of behaviour.
Ungird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady.
Will you not observe
The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
3. Remoteness from common apprehension; uncouthness.
Men worthier than himself
Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on;
And undergo, in an observing kind,
His humorous predominance.
This raised greater tumults and boilings in the hearts of men, than the strangeness and seeming unreasonableness of all the former articles.
4. Mutual dislike.
In this peace there was an article that no Englishman should enter into Scotland, and no Scottishman into England, without letters commendatory: this might seem a means to continue a strangeness between the nations; but it was done to lock in the borders.
5. Wonderfulness; power of raising wonder.
If a man, for curiosity or strangeness sake, would make a puppet pronounce a word, let him consider the motion of the instruments of voice, and the like sounds made in inanimate bodies.

- STRANGER, n. f. [from stranger, French.]
1. A foreigner; one of another country.
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent.
Your daughter hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger.
Of here and every where.
There is no place in Europe so much frequented by strangers, whether they are such as come out of curiosity, or such who are obliged to attend the court of Rome.
Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And strangers to the sun yet ripen here.
After a year's inter-regnum from the death of Romulus, the senate of their own authority chose a successor, and a stranger, merely upon the fame of his virtues.
2. One unknown.
Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.
You did void your rheum upon my beard,
And foot me, as you spurn a stranger cur
Over your threshold.
We ought to acknowledge, that no nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other.
That stranger guest the Taphean realm obeys.
They came, and near him plac'd the stranger guest.
3. A guest; one not a domestic.
He will vouchsafe
This day to be our guest: bring forth and pour Abundance, fit to honour and receive
Our heavenly stranger.
4. One unacquainted.
My child is yet a stranger in the world;
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years.
I was no stranger to the original: I had also studied Virgil's design, and his disposition of it.
5. One not admitted to any communication or fellowship.
I unspeak my detraction; here abjure
The taint and blames upon myself,
For strangers to my nature.
TO STRANGER, v. a. [from the noun.] To estrange; to alienate.
Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or leave her?
TO STRANGLE, v. a. [from strangle, Latin.]
1. To choke; to suffocate; to kill by intercepting the breath.
His face is black and full of blood;
His e-e-balls farther out, than when he liv'd;
Staring full ghastly, like a strangled man.
Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there be strangled ere my Romeo comes?
Do'st thou not know that thou hast strangled thine husband?
The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey.
So heinous a crime was the sin of adultery, that our Saxon ancestors compelled the adulterers to strangle herself; and he who debauched her was to be hanged over her grave.
2. To suppress; to hinder from birth or appearance.
By th' clock, 'tis day;
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp:
Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame?
STRANGLER, n. f. [from strangle.] One who strangles.
The band that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity.
STRANGLES, n. f. [from strangle.] Swellings in a horse's throat.
STRANGULATION, n. f. [from strangle.] The act of strangling; suffocation; the state of being strangled.
A sponge is mischievous, not in itself, for its powder is harmless; but because, being received into the stomach, it swelleth, and occasioning its continual distension, induceth a strangulation.
The reduction of the jaws is difficult, and, if they be not timely reduced, there happen paralysis and strangulation.
STRANGURY, n. f. [from stranguria, French.] A difficulty of urine attended with pain.
STRAPP, n. f. [from strapp, Dutch; stroppa, Italian.] A narrow long slip of cloth or leather.
These cloaths are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too; an' they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.
I found but one husband, a lively collier, that kicked and spurred all the while his wife was carrying him on; and had scarce passed a day without giving her the discipline of the strap.
STRAPPADO, n. f. Chastisement by blows.
Were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion.
STRAPPING, adj. Vast; large; bulky. Used of large men or women in contempt.

STRATA.

STR

STRATA, n. f. [The plural of stratum, Latin.] Beds; layers. A philosophical term.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata, or layers, placed one upon another; in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a fluid, will naturally be.

With how much wisdom are the strata laid,
Of sundry forms for sundry ends design'd!

STRATAGEM, n. f. [στρατήγημα; stratagem, French.]

1. An artifice in war; a trick by which an enemy is deceived. John Talbot, I did fend for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war.

Ev'ry minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem.

2. An artifice; a trick by which some advantage is obtained. Rouse up your courage, call up all your counsels,
And think on all those stratagems which nature
Keeps ready to encounter sudden dangers.

Those oft are stratagems which errors seem;
Nor is it Homer notes, but we who dream.

STRATIFY, v. a. [stratifico, Fr. from stratum, Lat.] To range in beds or layers. A chymical term.

STRATUM, n. f. [Latin.] A bed; a layer. A term of philosophy.

Another was found in a perpendicular fissure of a stratum of stone in Langeron iron-mine, Cumberland.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum, every way
The waters with the sandy stratum rise.

STRAW, n. f. [strop, Saxon; strow, Dutch.]

1. The stalk on which corn grows, and from which it is threshed.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtles breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

Apples in hay and straw ripened apparently; but the apple in the straw more.

My new straw hat, that's trimly lin'd with green,
Let Peggy wear.

More light he treads, more tall he seems to rise,
And struts a straw breadth nearer to the skies.

2. Any thing proverbially worthless.

Thy arms, thy liberty, beside
All that's on th' outside of thy hide,
Are mine by military law.

Of which I will not bate one straw.

'Tis not a straw matter whether the main cause be right or wrong.

STRAWBERRY, n. f. [fragaria, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial fibrous root: the leaves are veined, growing upon each footstalk; the stalks trail upon the ground: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, divided into ten equal parts, and expands in form of a star: the flower consists, for the most part, of five leaves, expanded in form of a rose, and having many stamina in the middle, round the base of the ovary: the fruit is globose or oval, and consists of a fleshy catable pulp, full of protuberances. The species are seven.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baler quality.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed.

Strawberries, by their fragrant smell, seem to be cordial: the seeds obtained by shaking the ripe fruit in Winter, are an excellent remedy against the stone. The juice of strawberries and limmons in spring-water is an excellent drink in bilious fevers.

STRAWBERRY Tree, n. f. [arbutus, Latin.]

It is ever green, the leaves roundish and serrated on the edges: the flowers consist of one leaf, and shaped like a pitcher: the fruit is of a fleshy substance, and very like a strawberry; divided into five cells, which contain many small seeds.

STRAWBUILT, adj. [straw and built.] Made up of straw.

The suburb of their strawbuilt citadel,
New rubb'd with balm, expatiate.

STRAWCOLOURED, adj. [straw and colour.] Of a light yellow.

I will discharge it in your strawcoloured beard.

STRAWWORM, n. f. [straw and worm.] A worm bred in straw.

STRAWY, adj. [from straw.] Made of straw; consisting of straw.

There the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.

In a field of corn, blown upon by the wind, there will appear waves of a colour differing from that of the rest; the wind, by depressing some of the ears, and not others, makes the one reflect more from the lateral and strawy parts than the rest.

STR

TO STRAY, v. n. [stree, Danish, to scatter; straviare, Italian, to wander.]

1. To wander; to rove.

My eye, descending from the hill, surveys
Where Thames gales o'er all her beauties stray.

Breathe on her lips, and in her beauties stray.

2. To rove out of the way; to range beyond the proper limits.

What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?
Or doest thy feeble feet unwearied hither stray?

No: where can I stray,
Save back to England? all the world's my way.

Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?

By holy crosses, where the kneeling prays
For happy wedlock hours.

Wand'rest thou within this lucid orb,
And stray'd from those fair fields of light above,
Amidst this new creation want it a guide
To reconduct thy steps?

3. To err; to deviate from the right.

We have erred and strayed.

STRAY, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any creature wandering beyond its limits; any thing lost by wandering.

She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken and impounded as a stray.

The king of Scots.
Should I take you for a stray,
You must be kept a year and day.

When he has traced his talk through all its wild ramblings, let him bring home his stray; not like the lost sheep with joy,
but with tears of penitence.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray.
He cries out, neighbour, hast thou seen a stray?

Of bullocks and of heifers pass this way?

2. Act of wandering.

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate.

STREAK, n. f. [streich, Saxon; strecke, Dutch; stria, Ital.]

A line of colour different from that of the ground.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn.

What mean those colour'd streaks in heav'n?
Dislended, as the brow of God appear'd?

The night comes on, we eager to pursue
'Till the last streaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear;
How ruddy, like your lips, their streaks appear!

While the fantastick tulip strives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted streak.

TO STREAK, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stripe; to variegate in hues; to dapple.

Mark what Jacob did;
When all the yearlings which were streak'd and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire.

A mule, admirably streaked and dapp'd with white and black.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streaks the East,
With first approach of light we must be ris'n.

And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flow'ry arbores.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon azure sky:
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;

Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing fable for the peaceful night.

2. To stretch. Obsolete.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks her neck
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;

Where, glotting round her rock, to fish the falls.

STREAKY, adj. [from streak.] Striped; variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snows appears the streaky green.

STREAM, n. f. [stream, Sax. straum, Icelandic; strom, Dut.]

1. A running water; the course of running water; current.

As plays the fun upon the glazy stream,
He brought stream out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and, being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather.

Thus from one common source our stream divides:
Ours is the Trojan, yours th' Arcadian side.

Divided interests, while thou think'st it to ways,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away.

STR

2. Anything issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone.

You, Drances, never want a stream of words.

The stream of beneficence hath, by several rivulets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current.

3. Any thing forcible and continued.

The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must give him a better proclamation.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion, against the current stream of antiquity.

TO STREAM, v. n. [stream, Icelandic.]

1. To flow; to run in a continuous current.

On all sides round
Stream the black blood, and smokes upon the ground.

2. To flow with a current; to pour out water in a stream; to be overflowed.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise Historick marbles to record his praise.

3. To issue forth with continuance.

Now to impartial love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream.

TO STREAM, v. a. To mark with colours or embroidery in long tracks.

The herald's mantle is streamed with gold.

STREAMER, n. f. [from stream.] An ensign; a flag; a pennon; any thing flowing loosely from a stock.

His brave fleet
With silken streamers, the young Phœbus fanning.

The rosy morn began to rise,
And way'd her soft streamers through the sky.

Brave Rupert from afar appears,
Whose waving streamers the glad general knows.

The man of sense his meat devours;
But only smells the peel and flow'rs:
And he must be an idle dreamer.

Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer.

STREAMY, adj. [from stream.]

1. Abounding in running water.

Acadia,
However streamy now, adust and dry,
Deny'd the goddess water: where deep Melas,
And rocky Cratis flow, the chariot smok'd Obscure with rising dust.

2. Flowing with a current.

Before him flaming his enormous shield,
Like the broad sun, illum'd all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray.

STREET, n. f. [street, Saxon; straz, German; stada, Spanish and Ital. stada, Danish; street, Dutch; stratum, Lat.]

1. A way, properly a paved way, between two rows of houses.

He led us through fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered people on both sides, standing in a row.

The streets are no larger than allies.

When night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the fons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine;
Witness the streets of Sodom.

The Italians say the ancients always considered the situation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less deviated from their rule of art.

When you tattle with some crony servant in the same street, leave your own street-door open.

2. Proverbially, a public place.

That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our streets.

Our public ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-rooms.

Let us reflect upon what we daily see practised in the world, and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets, he would retract his caution, and command us to be conformed to the world?

STREETWALKER, n. f. [street and walk.] A common prostitute that offers herself to sale in the open street.

STRENGTH, n. f. [strength, Saxon.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey.

Th' insulting Trojan came,
And menac'd us with force, our fleet with flame:
Was it the strength of this tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that sav'd you from the sword?

2. Power of endurance; firmness; durability; toughness; hardness.

Not founded on the brittle strength of bones.

3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.

The allies, after a successful Summer, are too apt, upon the strength of it, to neglect their preparations for the ensuing campaign.

4. Power of mind; force of any mental faculty.

Aristotle's large views, acuteness and penetration of thought, and strength of judgment, few have equalled.

STR

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good-sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness.

5. Potency of liquors.

6. Fortification; fortress.

The rashness of talking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth.

He thought
This inaccessible high strength to have seiz'd.

Betray'd in all his strengths, the wood belet;
All instruments, all arts of ruin met.

7. Support; maintenance of power.

What they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing shall be one of our principal strengths.

Plenty of mighty spirits, to strengthen his state.

TO STRENGTHEN, v. a. [from strength.]

1. To make strong.

2. To confirm; to establish.

Let us rise up and build: so they strengthened their hands for this work.

Authority is by nothing so much strengthened and confirmed as by custom; for no man easily distrusts the things which he and all men have been always bred up to.

Thence, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bless your critic's with a poet's fire:
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;
Whole own example strengthen all his laws,
And is himself that great sublime he draws.

3. To animate; to fix in resolution.

Charge Joshua, and encourage him and strengthen him.

4. To make to increase in power or security.

And firm for doctor Caius, hath appointed,
That he shall shuffle her away. Shaksp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

In choice of committees for ripening business for the council, it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency, by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon.

The knight is a much stronger tory in the country than in town, which is necessary for the keeping up his interest. Add.

8. Full; having any quality in a great degree; affecting the sight or smell forcibly.

Add with Ciceronian thyme strong-scented centaury. Dryd.
By mixing such powders we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

Thus shall there be made two bows of colours, an interior and stronger, by one reflexion in the drops, and an exterior and fainter by two; for the light becomes fainter by every reflexion. Newton's Opticks.

TO STRUGGLE. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. To labour; to act with effort.
2. To strive; to contend; to contest.

No man is guilty of an act of intemperance but he might have forborn it; not without some trouble from the struggles of the contrary habit, but still the thing was possible. South.

In the time of Henry VIII. differences of religion tore the nation into two mighty factions, and, under the name of Papist and Protestant, struggled in her bowels with many various events. Temple.

I repent, like some despairing wretch,
That boldly plunges in the frightful deep,
Then pants, and struggles with the whirling waves;
And catches every slender reed to save him. Smith.

3. To labour in difficulties; to be in agonies or distress.
Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

'Tis wisdom to beware
And better shun the bait, than struggle in the snare. Dryden.

If men struggle through as many troubles to be miserable as to be happy; my readers may be persuaded to be good. Spett.

He struggles groans beneath the cruel hands
Even of the clowns he feeds.

STRUGGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Labour; effort.

2. Contest; contention.

 STUB. n. f. [trech, Sax. Stubbe, Danish; stob, Dutch; stipes, Latin.]
 1. A thick short stock left when the rest is cut off.
 Dametas guided the horses to ill, that the wheel coming over a great stub of a tree, overturned the coach. Sidney.
 All about, old stocks and stubs of trees,
 Whereon nor fruit nor leaf was ever seen,
 Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees. Fairy Queen.
 To buy at the stub is the best for the buyer,
 More timely provision, the cheaper is fire. Tusser.
 Upon cutting down of an old timber tree, the stub hath put out sometimes a tree of another kind. Bacon's Nat. History.
 We here
 Live on tough roots and stubs, to thirt inur'd,
 Men to much misery and hardships born. Milton.
 Tricky stubs, instead of trees are found,
 Cr woods with knots and knares deform'd and old;
 Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryd. Knights Tale.
 2. A log; a block.
 You shall have more adoe to drive our dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to haul our choicest wits to that asinine feat of saw-thistles and brambles. Milton.
 To STUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To force up; to extirpate.
 His two tusks serve for fighting and feeding; by the help wherof he stubs up edible roots out of the ground, or tears off the bark of trees. Grew's Musaeum.
 The other tree was griev'd,
 Grew scrubby, dry'd a-top, was stunted;
 So the next parson stubb'd and burnt it. Swift.
 STUBBED. adj. [from stub.] Truncated; short and thick.
 A pain he in his head-piece feels,
 Against a stubb'd tree he reels,
 And up went poor Hobgoblin's heels. Dryden.

 After the first crop is off they plow in the wheat stubble.
 STUBBORN. adj. [This word, of which no obvious etymology appears, is derived by Minlow from stubborn, related by Junius to stobos, and deduced better by Mr. Lye, from stub, perhaps from stub-born.]
 1. Obdurate; inflexible; contumacious.
 The queen is obstinate,
 Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by't. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
 You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend braggart,
 We'll teach you.—
 He believed he had so humbled the garrison, that they would be no longer so stubborn. Clarendon.
 2. Persevering; persevering; steady.
 All this is to be had only from the epistles themselves, with stubborn attention, and more than common application. Locke.
 3. Stiff; not pliable; inflexible; not easily admitting impression.
 Strifeful Atin in their stubborn mind,
 Coals of contention and hot vengeance tin'd. Spenser.
 Love softens me, and blows up fires which pass
 Through my tough heart, and melt the stubborn mafs. Dryd.
 I'll not flatter this tempestuous king,
 But work his stubborn soul a nobler way. Dryden.
 Take a plant of stubborn oak,
 And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryden.
 4. Hardy; firm.
 Patience under torturing pain,
 Where stubborn stoicks would complain. Swift.
 5. Harsh; rough; rugged.
 We will not oppose any thing that is hard and stubborn, but by a soft answer deaden their force. Bacon.
 6. In all its uses it commonly implies something of a bad quality.
 STUBBORNLY. adv. [from stubborn.] Obstinately; contumaciously; inflexibly.
 Stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
 About a certain question in the law. Shaksp. II. VI.
 He wilfully neglects his book, and stubbornly refuses any thing he can do. Locke.
 So close they cling, so stubbornly retire,
 Their love's more violent than the chymist's fire. Garth.
 STUBBORNNESS. n. f. [from stubborn.] Obstinacy; vicious stoutness; contumacy; inflexibility.
 Happy is your grace,
 That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
 Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shaksp. As you like it.
 He chose a course least subject to envy, between stiff stub- bornness and filthy flattery. Hayward.
 Patriots, in peace, assert the people's right,
 With noble stubbornness resisting might. Dryden.
Stubbornness, and an obstinate disobedience, must be mal-tered with blows. Locke.
 It failed, partly by the accidents of a storm, and partly by the stubbornness or treachery of that colony for whose relief it was designed. Swift.

 book. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 This grave advice some sober studen bears,
 And loudly rings it in his fellow's ears. Dryden's Pers.
 A student shall do more in one hour, when all things concur to invite him to any special study, than in four at a dull season. Watson's Logic.
 I highly touch the subject, and recommend it to some student of the profession. Arbutnot on Coins.
 STU'DIED. adj. [from study.]
 1. Learned; versed in any study; qualified by study.
 He died
 As one that had been studied in his death,
 To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,
 As 'twere a careless trifle. Shaksp. Othello.
 I am well studied for a liberal thanks,
 Which I do owe you. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

 A prince should not be so loosely studied as to remember to weak a composition. Shaksp. Othello.
 STU'DIER. n. f. [from study.] One who studies.
 Lippius was a great studier of the stoical philosophy: upon his death-bed his friend told him, that he needed not use arguments to persuade him to patience, the philosophy which he had studied would furnish him; he answers him, Lord Jesus, give me Christian patience.
 There is a law of nature, as intelligible to a rational creature and studier of that law, as the positive laws of commonwealths. Locke.
 STU'DIOUS. adj. [studiosus, French; studiosus, Latin.]
 1. Given to books and contemplation; given to learning.
 A proper remedy for wandering thoughts, he that shall propose, would do great service to the studious and contemplative part of mankind. Locke.
 2. Diligent; busy.
Studious to find new friends, and new allies. Tickell.
 3. Attentive to; careful.

 In woman, than to study household good. Milton.
 If a gentleman be to study any language, it ought to be that of his own country. Locke.
 2. To consider attentively.
 He hath studied her well, and translated her out of honesty into English. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Study thyself: what rank, or what degree
 The wife Creator has ordain'd for thee. Dryden's Pers.
 You have studied every spot of ground in Flanders, which has been the scene of battles and sieges. Dryden.
 3. To learn by application.
 You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen lines, which I would set down. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 STUFF. n. f. [stuf, Dutch; estuffe, French.]
 1. Any matter or body.
 Let Phidias have rude and obstinate stuff to carve: though his art do that it should, his work will lack that beauty, which otherwise in fitter matter it might have had. Hooker.
 The workman on his stuff his skill doth show,
 And yet the stuff gives not the man his skill. Davies.
 Of brick, and of that stuff, they cast to build
 A city and tow'r. Milton.
 Pierce an hole near the inner edge, because the triangle hath there most substance of stuff. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
 2. Materials out of which any thing is made.
 Thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth,
 That thou art even natural in thine art. Shaksp. Timon.
 Cæsar hath wept;
 Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.
 Success or loss, what is or is not, serves
 As stuff for these two to make paradoxes. Shaksp. Othello.
 Thy father, that poor rag,
 Must be thy subject, who in spite put stuff
 To some the-beggar, and compounded thee
 Poor rogue hereditary. Shaksp. Timon.
 Degrading prose explains his meaning all,
 And shews the stuff, and not the workman's skill. Reform.
 3. Furniture; goods.
 Fare away to get our stuff aboard. Shaksp. Othello.
 He took away locks, and gave away the king's stuff. Hayward.

 With stuff. Cowley's Davidis.
 4. That which fills any thing.
 With some sweet oblivious antidote
 Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
 Which weighs upon the heart. Shaksp. Othello.
 5. Effence; elemental part.
 Though in the trade of war I have slain men,
 Yet do I hold it very stuff o' th' conscience
 To do no contriv'd murder. Shaksp. Othello.
 6. Any mixture or medicine.
 I did compound for her
 A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would seize
 The present power of life. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 7. Cloth or texture of any kind.
 Textures of wool thinner and lighter than cloth.
 Let us turn the wools of the land into cloaths and stuffs of our own growth, and the hemp and flax growing here into linen cloth and cordage. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 9. Matter or thing. In contempt.
 O proper stuff!
 This is the very painting of your fear. Shaksp. Macbeth.

 Tongue and brain not. Shaksp. Othello.
 At this fusty stuff
 The large Achilles, on his prest bed lollings,
 From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shaksp.
 Please not thyself the flatt'ring crowd to hear,
 'Tis fulsome stuff to feed thy itching ear. Dryden's Pers.
 Anger

STU

Anger would indite
Such woful stuff as I or Shadwell write. Dryden's Juven.
To-morrow will be time enough
To hear such mortifying stuff. Swift.
The free things that among rakes pass for wit and spirit,
Must be shocking stuff to the ears of persons of delicacy. Cariss.
10. It is now seldom used in any sense but in contempt or dislike.

To STUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fill very full with any thing.
When we've stuff'd

These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls. Shakespeare.
If I find him comforting the kings,
It will stuff his suspicion more fully. Shakespeare.

Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this maw, this vast unhide-bound corps. Milton.
What have we more to do than to stuff our guts with these figs? L'Estrange.

This crook drew hazel boughs adown,
And stuff'd her apron wide with nuts for brown. Gay.

2. To fill to uncleaness.
With some oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bottom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart. Shakespeare.

3. To thrust into any thing.
Put roses into a glass with a narrow mouth, stuffing them close together, but without bruising, and they retain smell and colour fresh a year. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To fill by being put into any thing.
Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form. Shakespeare.
With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode. Dryden's Æn.
A bed,

The stuffing leaves, with hides of bears o'erspread. Dryden.
5. To swell out by something thrust in.
I will be the man that shall make you great.—I cannot perceive how, unless you give me your doubtlet, and stuff me out with straw. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

The gods for sin
Should with a swelling drop of stuff thy skin. Dryden.
Officers Banckis lays

Two cushions stuff'd with straw, the seat to raise. Dryden.
6. To fill with something improper or superfluous.
It is not usual among the best patterns to stuff the report of particular lives with matter of public record. Wotton.
Those accusations are stuffed with odious generals, that the proofs seldom make good. Clarendon.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head
With all such reading as was never read. Pope.

7. To obstruct the organs of scent or respiration.
These gloves the count sent me; they are an excellent perfume.—I am stuffed, cousin, I cannot smell. Shakespeare.

He aim'd at all, yet never could excel
In any thing but stuffing of his veal. King's Cookery.

9. To form by stuffing.
An eastern king put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence, and ordered his hide to be stuffed into a cushion, and placed upon the tribunal. Swift.

To STUFF. v. n. To feed gluttonously.
Wedg'd in a spacious elbow-chair,
And on her plate a treble share,
As if she ne'er could have enough,
Taught harmless man to cram and stuff. Swift.

STUFFING. n. s. [from stuff.]
1. That by which any thing is filled.
Rome was a farrago out of the neighbouring nations; and Greece, though one monarchy under Alexander, yet the people that were the stuffing and materials thereof, existed before. Hale.

2. Relishing ingredients put into meat.
Arrach leaves are very good in pottage and stuffings. Mort.

STUKE, or STUCK. n. s. [stuc, French; stucco, Italian.] A com-

STUM. n. s. [stum, Swedish, supposed to be contracted from multum, Latin.]

1. Wine yet unfermented; the cream or froth on sum.
An unctuous clammy vapour, that arises from the sum of grapes, when they lie matted in the vat, puts out a light, when dipped into it. Addison on Italy.

2. New wine used to raise fermentation in dead and vapid wines.
Let our wines without mixture or sum be all fine,
Or call up the matter, and break his dull noddle. B. Johnson.

STU

3. Wine revived by a new fermentation.
Drink ev'ry letter on't in sum,
And make it brisk champagne become. Hudibras.

To STUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To renew wine by mixing fresh wine and raising a new fermentation.
Vapid wines are put upon the lees of noble wines to give them spirit, and we stum our wines to renew their spirits. Pope.

To STUMBLE. v. n. [This word junius derives from stump, and says the original meaning is to strike or trip against a stump. I rather think it comes from tumble.]

1. To trip in walking.
When the will take the rein, I let her run;
But she'll not stumble. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
A headfall being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burr. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought that Glo'ister stumbled; and, in falling,
Struck me, that fought to stay him, overboard. Shakespeare.
The way of the wicked is as darkness: they know not at what they stumble. Prov. iv. 19.

Cover'd o'er with blood,
Which from the patriot's breast in torrents flow'd,
He faints: his blood no longer hears the reins;
But stumbles o'er the heap his hand had slain. Prior.

2. To slip; to err; to slide into crimes or blunders.
He that loveth his brother, abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. 1 Jo. ii. 10.

This my day of grace
They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste;
But hard be harden'd, blind be blinded more,
That they may stumble on, and deeper fall. Milton.

3. To strike against by chance; to light on by chance.
This extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady of that country, by which occasion she had stumbled upon such mischances as were little for the honour of her or her family. Sidney.

What man art thou, that thus becomest in night,
So stumblest on my counsel. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
A mouse, bred in a chest, dropped out over the file, and stumbled upon a delicious morsel. L'Estrange.

Ovid stumbled, by some inadvertency, upon Livia in a bath.
Many of the greatest inventions have been accidentally stumbled upon by men busy and inquisitive. Ray.

Write down p and b, and make signs to him to endeavour to pronounce them, and guide him by shewing him the motion of your own lips; by which he will, with a little endeavour, stumble upon one of them. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To STUMBLE. v. a.
1. To obstruct in progress; to make to trip or flop.
2. To make to boggle; to offend.
Such terms amuse'd them all,
And stumbled many. Milton's Paradise Lost.

One thing more stumbles me in the very foundation of this hypothesis. Locke.

STUMBLE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A trip in walking.
2. A blunder; a failure.
One stumble is enough to deface the character of an honourable life. L'Estrange.

STUMBLER. n. s. [from stumble.] One that stumbles.
Be sweet to all: is thy complexion four?
Then keep such company; make them thy ally:
Get a sharp wife, a servant that will low'r;
A stumbler stumbles least in rugged way. Horat.

STUMBLINGBLOCK. n. s. [from stumble.] Cause of stumbling;
STUMBLINGSTONE. } cause of error; cause of offence.
We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness. 1 Cor. i. 23.

This stumblingstone we hope to take away.
Shakespeare is a stumblingblock to these rigid critics. Spenser.

STUMP. n. s. [stump, Danish; stompe, Dutch; stompen, Dan.
to lop.] The part of any solid body remaining after the rest is taken away.

He struck so strongly, that the knotty stump
Of his huge tail he quite in under cleft;
Five joints thereof he hew'd, and but the stump him left. Spenser.
Your colts' tooth is not cast yet.—Not while I have a stump. Shakespeare.

He through the bushes scrambles;
A stump doth trip him in his pace;
Down comes poor Hob upon his face,
Amongst the briars and brambles. Drayton's Nymphid.

Who, 'cause they're waded to the stumps,
Are represented best by rumps. Hudibras.
A coach-horse snapt off the end of his finger, and I dressed the stump with common digestive. Wise man's Surgery.

A poor ass, now wore out to the stump, fell down under his load. L'Estrange.
Against a stump his tusks the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryden.
A tongue

STU

A tongue might have some resemblance to the stump of a feather. Grew's Museum.
Worn to the stumps in the service of the maids, 'tis thrown out of doors, or condemned to kindle a fire. Swift.

STUMPY. adj. [from stump.] Full of stumps; hard; stiff;
strong. A bad word.
They burn the stubble, which, being so stumpy, they seldom plow in. Mortimer.

To STUN. v. a. [German, Saxon, zerstun, noise.]
1. To confound or dizzy with noise.
An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd, Assaults his ear. Milton.

Still shall I hear, and never quit the score,
Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Theleid o'er and o'er. Dryden.
Too strong a noise stuns the ear, and one too weak does not act upon the organ. Chryse.

So Alma, weary'd of being great,
And nodding in her chair of state,
Stunn'd and worn out with endless chat,
Of Will did this, and Nan said that.

Shouts as thunder loud afflict the air,
And stun the birds released.
The Britons, once a savage kind,
Descendants of the barbarous Huns,
With limbs robust, and voice that stuns,
You taught to modulate their tongues,
And speak without the help of lungs. Swift.

2. To make senseless or dizzy with a blow.
One hung a pole-axe at his saddle-bow,
And one a heavy mace to stun the foe. Dryden.

STUNG. The preterite and participle passive of sting.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shaksp. King Lear.

With envy stung, they view each other's deeds,
The fragrant work with diligence proceeds. Dryden's Æn.
STUNG. The preterite of stink.
To STUNT. v. a. [stunta, Islandick.] To hinder from growth.

Though this usage stunted the girl in her growth, it gave her a hardy constitution; she had life and spirit. Arbutnot.
There he stopt short, nor since has writ a title,
But has the wit to make the most of little;
Like stunted hide-bound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Pope.

The tree grew scrubby, dry'd a-top and stunted,
And the next parson stubb'd and burnt it. Swift.

STUPE. n. s. [stupa, Latin.] Cloath or flax dipped in warm medicaments, and applied to a hurt or sore.

A fomentation was by some pretender to surgery applied with coarse woollen stupes, one of which was bound upon his leg. Wise man's Surgery.

The scar divide, and stupe the part affected with wine. Wise man.

STUPEFACTION. n. s. [stupescere, Fr. stupescere, Lat.] Insensibility; dulness; stupidity; sluggishness of mind; heavy folly.
All resistance of the dictates of conscience brings a hardness and stupescence upon it. South.

She sent to ev'ry child
Firm impudence, or stupescence mild;
And trait succeeded, leaving shame no room,
Cibberian forehead, or Cimberian gloom. Dunciad.

STUPEFACTIVE. adj. [from stupescere, Latin; stupescere, Fr.]
Causing insensibility; dulling; obstructing the senses; narcotick; opiate.
It is a gentle fomentation, and hath a very little mixture of some stupescative. Bacon's Natural History.

Opium hath a stupescative part, and a heating part; the one moving sleep, the other a heat. Bacon.

STUPEFACIOUS. adj. [stupendus, Lat.] Wonderful; amazing; astonishing.
All those stupendus acts deservedly are the subject of a history, excellently written in Latin by a learned prelate. Claren.

Great joy was at their meetings, and at fight
Of that stupendus bridge his joy increas'd. Milton.
Portents and prodigies their souls amaz'd;
But most, when this stupendus pile was rais'd. Dryden.

Mortals, fly this curst detected race:
A hundred of the same stupendus size,
A hundred Cyclops live among the hills.
Our numbers can scarce give us an idea of the vast quantity of systems in this stupendus piece of architecture. Gibson.

STUPID. adj. [stupidus, French; stupidus, Latin.]
1. Dull; wanting sensibility; wanting apprehension; heavy;
sluggish of understanding.
O that men should be so stupid grown
As to forsake the living God. Milton.

Men, boys and women, stupid with surprise,
Where'er the paffes, fix their wond'ring eyes. Dryden.
Know, I am not so stupid, or so hard,
Not to feel praise, or fame's deferred reward. Dryden.

STU

With wild surprise
A moment stupid, motionless he stood. Thomson.
2. Performed without skill or genius.
Wit, as the chief of virtue's friends,
Disdains to serve ignoble ends:
Observe what loads of stupid thimes
Oppress us in corrupted times. Swift.

STUPIDITY. n. s. [stupiditas, Fr. stupiditas, Latin.]
Heaviness of mind; sluggishness of understanding.
Shadwell alone, of all my sons, is he Who stands confirm'd in full stupidity. Dryden.

STUPIDLY. adv. [from stupid.]

That space the evil one abstracted stood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd stupidly good. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Dully; without apprehension.
On the shield there was engraven maps of countries, which Ajax could not comprehend, but looked on as stupidly as his fellow-beast the lion. Dryden's Fables, Deduct.

STUPIDITY. n. s. [from stupid.] That which causes stupidity.
To STUPIDIFY. v. a. [stupidifico, Latin.] This word should therefore be spelled stupidify; but the authorities are against it.]
To make stupid; to deprive of sensibility; to dull.
It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupid. Bac.

Those
Will stupidify and dull the sense a while. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Pounce it into the quicksilver, and so proceed to the stupi-
fying. Bacon.

Consider whether that method, used to quiet some confusions, does not stupidify more. Decay of Piety.
The fumes of his passion do as really intoxicate his discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupidify the brain of a man overcharged with it. South.

Envy, like a cold poison, benumbs and stupidifies; and conscious of its own impotence, folds its arms in despair. Gilbert.
STUPOR. n. s. [Latin; stupor, French.] Suspension or diminution of sensibility.

A pungent pain in the region of the kidneys, a stupor, or dull pain in the thigh and colick, are symptoms of an inflammation of the kidneys. Arbutnot on Diet.

To STUPRATE. v. a. [stuprare, Latin.] To ravish; to violate.
STUPRATION. n. s. [stupratio, from stuprare, Lat.] Rape; violation.

STURDILY. adv. [from sturdy.]

1. Stoutly; hardily.
2. Obstinately; resolutely.
Then withdraw
From Cambridge, thy old nurse; and, as the rest,
Here toughly chew and sturdily digest
Th' immense vast volumes of our common law. Donne.

STURDINESS. n. s. [from sturdy.]
1. Stoutness; hardiness.
Sacrifice not his innocency to the attaining some little skill of bustling for himself, by his conversation with vicious boys, when the chief use of that sturdiness, and standing upon his own legs, is only for the preservation of his virtue. Locke.

2. Brutal strength.
STURDY. adv. [sturdy, French.]
1. Hardy; stout; brutal; obstinate. It is always used of men with some disagreeable idea of coarseness or rudeness.
This must be done, and I would fain see Mortal so sturdy as to gainfay. Hudibras.

A sturdy hardened finner shall advance to the utmost pitch of impiety with less reluctance than he took the first steps, whilst his conscience was yet vigilant and tender. Atterbury.
Aw'd by that house, accusom'd to command,
The sturdy kerns in due subjection stand,
Nor bear the reins in any foreign hand. Dryden.

2. Strong; forcible.
The ill-apparelled knight now had gotten the reputation of some sturdy lout, he had so well defended himself. Sidney.
Ne ought his sturdy strokes might stand before,
That high trees overthrew, and rocks in pieces tore. F. Q.

3. Stiff; stout.
He was not of any delicate contexture, his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Wotton.

Sturdy oaks
Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts,
Or torn up their. Milton's Par. Reg.

STURGEON. n. s. [sturio, sturio, Latin.] A sea-fish.

by it is less apt to move; and therefore naturals stut. Bacon.

STUTTER. v. n. [stuten, to hinder, Dutch.] To speak
To STUTTER. } with hesitation; to stammer.
Divers stut: the cause is the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move; and therefore naturals stut. Bacon.

STU

STUTTER. } n. f. [from stut.] One that speaks with hesita-STUTTERER. } tion; a stammerer.
 Many stutters are very choleric, choler inducing a dryness in the tongue. Bacon's Natural History.

STY. n. f. [Frige, Saxon.]
 1. A cabin to keep hogs in.
 Tell Richmond,

That in the sty of this most bloody boar,
 My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold. Shakep. R. III.

When her hogs had mis'd their way,
 Th' untoward creatures to the sty I drove,
 And whistl'd all the way. Gay.

May thy black pigs lie warm in little sty,
 And have no thought to grieve them 'till they die. King.

Any place of bestial debauchery.
 They all their friends and native home forget,
 To roll with pleasure in a sensual sty. Milton.

With what ease
 Might'st thou expel this monster from his throne,
 Now made a sty. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

To STY. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a sty.
 Here you sty me

In this hard rock, while you do keep from me
 The rest of th' island. Shakepeare's Tempest.

 Bent their aspect. Milton.

STYLE. n. f. [Stylus, Latin.]
 1. Manner of writing with regard to language.
 Happy

That can transmute the stubbornness of fortune
 Into so quiet, and so sweet a style. Shakepeare.

Their beauty I will rather leave to poets, than venture upon to tender and nice a subject with my feverish style. Milton.

Proper words in proper places, make the true definition of a style. Swift.

Let some lord but own the happy lines,
 How the wit brightens, and the style refines. Pope.

2. Manner of writing appropriate to particular characters.
 No style is held for base, where love well named is. Sidney.

There was never yet philosopher,
 That could endure the toothach patiently,
 However they have writ the style of gods,
 And make a pish at chance and sufferance. Shakepeare.

3. Title; appellation.
 Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Shakepeare.

The king gave them in his commission the style and appellation which belonged to them. Clarendon.

O virgin! or what other name you bear
 Above that style; O more than mortal fair!
 Let not an humble suppliant sue in vain. Dryden's En.

Propitious hear our pray'r,
 Whether the style of Titan please thee more,
 Whose purple rays th' Achaemenes adore. Pope's Statius.

4. Course of writing. Unusual.
 While his thoughts the ling'ring day beguile,
 To gentle Arcite let us turn our style. Dryden.

5. A manner of iron used anciently in writing on tables of wax.
 Placing two styles or needles of the same steel, touched with the same loadstone, when the one is removed but half a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillars. Brown.

7. The stalk which rises from amid the leaves of a flower.
Style is the middle prominent part of the flower of a plant, which adheres to the fruit or seed: 'tis usually slender and long, whence it has its name. Quincy.

The figure of the flower-leaves, stamina, apices, style, and seed-vessel. Ray.

8. STYLE of Court, is properly the practice observed by any court in its way of proceeding. Ayliffe's Parergon.

 name.

The chancellor of the Exchequer they had no mind should be styled a knight. Clarendon.

Er not that so shall end
 The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style
 The strife of glory. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortune's gifts, my actions
 May style their own rewards. Denham's Sephy.

Whoever backs his tenets with authorities, thinks he ought to carry the cause, and is ready to style impudence in any one who shall stand out. Locke.

His conduct might have made him stil'd
 A father, and the nymph his child. Swift.

STYPTICK. adj. [stypticus; stypticus, Fr.] This is usually written styptic. See STYPTIC. The same as astringent; but generally expresses the most efficacious sort of astringents, or those which are applied to stop hemorrhages. Quincy.

Fruits of trees and shrubs contain phlegm, oil, and an essential salt, by which they are sharp, sweet, four or styptic.

Abbot on Aliments.

STYPTICITY. n. f. [Properly stypticity.] The power of stanching blood.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids. Flower.

To STYTHY. v. a. [See STYTHY.] To forge on an anvil.
 By the forge that styth'd Mars his helm,

I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er. Shakepeare.

SUA'SIBLE. adj. [from suades, Latin.] Easy to be persuaded.
 SUA'SIVE. adj. [from suades, Lat.] Having power to persuade.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was but suasive and political, yet it had the force of coercion, and despotical. South's Sermons.

SUA'SORY. adj. [suasorius, Latin.] Having tendency to persuade.

SUA'VITY. n. f. [suavitas, French; suavitas, Latin.]

 She desired them for rarity, pulchritude, and suavity. Brown.

2. Sweetness to the mind.
 SUB, in composition, signifies a subordinate degree.

SUBACID. adj. [sub and acidus, Latin.] Sour in a small degree.

The juice of the stem is like the chyle in the animal body, not sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly sub- acid in all plants. Abbot on Aliments.

SUBACRID. adj. [sub and acridus, Latin.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.

The green choler of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacrid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Flower.

To SUBACR. v. a. [subacris, Latin.] To reduce; to subdue.
 Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subac it into a more dense body. Bacon.

SUBACTION. n. f. [subactio, Latin.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concoction two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subdivision; the other maturation; whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon's Natural History.

SUBALTERN. adj. [subalterne, French.] Inferiour; subordinate; that which in different respects is both superior and inferiour. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Ad.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
 Like watchmen round their chief appear;
 Each had his lantern in his hand,

And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet after he received his commission for a regiment, he consulted the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Swift.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern. Watts.

SUBALTERNATE. adj. [subalternus, Latin.] Succeding by turns. Ditt.

SUBASTRINGENT. adj. [sub and astringent.] Astringent in a small degree.

SUBBEADLE. n. f. [sub and beadle.] An under beadle.
 They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons. Ayliffe's Parerg.

SUBCELESTIAL. adj. [sub and celestialis.] Placed beneath the heavens.

The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of these. Glavin's Serp.

SUBCHANTER. n. f. [sub and cantans; successor, Lat.] The deputy of the precentor in a cathedral.

SUBCLAVIAN. adj. [sub and clavius, Latin.]
 Subclavian is applied to any thing under the armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle. Quincy.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the sub- clavian division, doth equi-distantly communicate its activity unto either arm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs. Art.

SUBCONSTELLATION. n. f. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, what congruity they are described in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SUBCONTRARY. adj. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferiour degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are sub- contraries; as, some vine is a tree: some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false. Watts.

SUBCONTRACTED.

SUB

SUBCONTRACTED. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

Your claim,
 I bar it in the interest of my wife;
 'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
 And I her husband contradict your bances. Shakep. K. Lear.

SUBCUTANEOUS. adj. [sub and cutaneous.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDEACON. n. f. [subdeaconus, Latin.]
 In the Romish church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant. Ayliffe's Parergon.

SUBDEAN. n. f. [subdecanus, Lat.] The vicegerent of a dean.
 Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only. Ayliffe.

SUBDECEU'PLE. adj. [sub and decuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDERISORIOUS. adj. [sub and derisor.] Scoffing or ridi-culing with tenderness and delicacy.

This subderisorous mirth is far from giving any offence to us:
 it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation. Mare.

SUBDITIOUS. adj. [subditivus, Latin.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

To SUBDIVERSIFY. v. a. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras; and these variously subdi- versify according to the fancy of the artificer. Hale.

To SUBDIVIDE. v. a. [subdividit, French; sub and divide.]
 To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two becmols, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen. Bacon's Nat. History.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after An-tonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided. Bacon.

The glad father glories in his child,
 When he can subdivide a fraction. Recommon.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity. Dryden.

STANYSION. n. f. [stansioison, French; from subdivide.]
 1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a sub- division; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther sub- divided into minutes and seconds. Watts's Logick.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.
 How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the abur-dicty of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one? Addison.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit. Arbutnot.

SUBDU'CE. adj. [subducere, Latin.] Cunning; subtle; sly.

To SUBDUCE. v. a. [subducere, Latin.]
 To SUBDUCE. v. a. [subducere, Latin.]

1. To withdraw; to take away.
 Or nature fail'd in me, and left some part
 Not proof enough such object to sustain;
 Or from my side subducing, took perhaps
 More than enough. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To subtract by arithmetical operation.
 Take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction: if out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite. Hale.

SUBDU'CTION. n. f. [from subducere.]
 1. The act of taking away.

Possibly the Divine Beneficence subducing that influence, which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality 'till that moment of the subduction. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.
 Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetick, subduc- tion: if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduct ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite. Hale.

To SUBDUCE. v. a. [from subducere, or subducere, Latin.]
 1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to overpower.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
 To such a lowliness, but his unkind daughters. Shakepeare.

Them that rose up against me, hast thou subdu'd under me. 2 Sa. xxii. 40.

If aught were worthy to subduce
 The soul of man. Milton.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.
 Be fruitful, and replenish the earth; and subduce it. Gen. i. 28.

SUB

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire. Peach.
 To overcome in battle, and subdue

Nations, and bring home spoils. Milton.
 The Romans made those times the standard of their wit,
 when they subdued the world. Sprat.

3. To tame; to subact.
 Nor is't unwholesome to subdue the land
 By often exercise; and where before
 You broke the earth, again to plow. Mary's Virgil.

SUBDU'EMENT. n. f. [from subducere.] Conquest. A word not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee,
 As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
 Bravely despoiling forests and subdu' em. Shakepeare.

SUBDU'ER. n. f. [from subducere.] Conquerour; tamer.
 Great god of might, that reignest in the mind,
 And all the body to thy heft do it flame;

Victor of gods, subdue of mankind,
 That do'st the lions and fell tyers tame,
 Who can express the glory of thy might? Sponser.

Their curious eye
 Discerns their great subduer's awful mien
 And corresponding features fast. Philips.

Figs are great subduers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely emollient. Arbutnot.

SUBDU'PLE. adj. [subduplex, Fr. sub and duplex, Latin.]
 SUBDUPLICATE. } Containing one part of two.

As one of these under subdu'ples doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subdu'ple proportion unto it, so two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a subseptuple. Wilson's Math. Mag.

The motion generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplex te proportion of the forces. Cartes's Opt.

SUBJACENT. adj. [subjacens, Latin.] Lying under.
 The superficial parts of rocks and mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains. Wood.

To SUBJECT. v. a. [subjicitus, Latin.]
 1. To put under.

The angel led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
 To the subjected plain. Milton.

The medal bears each form and name:
 In one short view, subjected to our eye,
 Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.

2. To reduce to submission; to make subordinate; to make submissive.

Think not, young warriors, your diminish'd name
 Shall lose of lustre, by subjecting rage
 To the cool dictates of experience'd age. Dryden.

3. To enslave; to make obnoxious.
 I live on bread like you, feel want like you,
 Taste grief, need friends, like you: subjected thus,
 How can you say to me, I am a king? Shakep. Rich. II.

I see thee, in that fatal hour,
Subjected to the victor's cruel pow'r,
 Led hence a slave. Dryden.

The blind will always be led by those that see, or fall into the ditch: and he is the most subjected, the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

4. To expose; to make liable.
 If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniences of an erroneous circulation. Ambrosini.

5. To submit; to make accountable.
 God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend. Locke.

6. To make subservient.
Subjected to his service angel-wings. Milton.

SUBJECT. adj. [subjectus, Latin.]
 1. Placed or situated under.

Th' eastern tower,
 Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale
 To see the sight. Shakep. Troilus and C. ssida.

2. Living under the dominion of another.
 Esau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.

3. Exposed; liable; obnoxious.
 Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
 And he the noble image of my youth
 Is overspread with them. Shakepeare.

All human things are subject to decay,
 And when fate summons, monarchs must obey. Dryden.

4. Being that on which any action operates, whether intellectual or material.

I enter into the subject matter of my discourse. Dryden.

SUBJECT. n. f. [subjicit, French.]
 1. One who lives under the dominion of another.

Every subject's duty is the king's,
 But every subject's soul is his own. Shakepeare's Henry V.

Never subject long'd to be a king,
 As I do long and wish to be a subject. Shakep. Henry VI.

SUB

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it. Swift.
Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistrates of the sovereign. Davies.

Were subjects to but only by their choice,
And not from birth did fore'd dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the publick voice. Dryden.
2. That on which any operation either mental or material is performed.

Now spurs the late traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
This subject for heroic song pleas'd me. Milton.
Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation. Deacy of Poetry.
I will not venture on so nice a subject with my feeble style. Milton.

Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which being capable of all the graces that colours, and elegance of design can give, shall afford a perfect art, an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts's Logic.
My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.
Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Bacon.

4. [In Grammar.] The nominative case to a verb, is called by Grammarians the subject of the verb. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
SUBJECTION. n. f. [from subject.] The act of subduing.

1. The act of subduing.
After the conquest of the kingdom and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were that fighting against the king had saved themselves by flight. Hale.

2. [Subjection, Fr.] The state of being under government.
Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary; we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hobbes.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found one engagement. Spenser.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite.
SUBJECTIVE. adj. [from subject.] Relating not to the object but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

SUBINTRACTION. n. f. [from sub and intrahere, Latin.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which, forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subinjection of its parts. Boyle.

TO SUBJOIN. v. a. [from sub and joindre, French; subjungo, Latin.] To add at the end; to add afterwards.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and subjoins a reason. Saunders's Sermons.

SUBITANEOUS. adj. [from subitaneus, Latin.] Sudden; hasty.
TO SUBJUGATE. v. a. [from subjugare, Fr. subjugo, Latin.] To conquer; to subdue; to bring under dominion by force.

O fav'rite virgin that hast warm'd the breast,
Whole sov'reign dictates subjugate the east! Prior.
He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

SUBJUGATION. n. f. [from subjugare.] The act of subduing.
This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after their subjugation by the Turks. Hale.

SUBJUNCTION. n. f. [from subjunctio, Latin.] The state of being subjoined; the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction to some other verb. Clarke.
SUBJUNCTIVE. adj. [from subjunctivus, Latin; subjunctif, Fr.]

1. Subjoined to something else.

2. [In Grammar.] The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation, to signify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjunctive mood. Clarke.

SUBLIMABLE. adj. [from sublimare.] Possible to be sublimed.
SUBLIMABLENESS. n. f. [from sublimabilitas.] Quality of admitting sublimation.

He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easy sublimability, as common salt armoniac. Boyle.

SUBLIMATE. n. f. [from sublimare.]

SUB

1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.
Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimata makes. Bacon.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

The particles of mercury uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt compose mercury sublimata, and with the particles of sulphur, cinnabar. Newton's Opticks.

TO SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublimare.]

1. To raise by the force of chemical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimated are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Deacy of Poetry.

The precepts of Christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it. Deacy of Poetry.

SUBLIMATION. n. f. [from sublimare, Fr. from sublimare.]

1. A chemical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation, only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed being solid are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation or sublimation; that is a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon's Natural History.

Since oil of sulphur per campanam is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation. Newt. Opt.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns
Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Deacy.
Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality. Saunders.

SUBLIME. adj. [from sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They sum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime
With clang despoil'd the ground. Milton.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tiphon there keeps the ward. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly frained to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton.

Can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime;
And that the gen'rous mind releas'd by death,
Can cover lazy limbs? Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easily in style, they work in sense sublime. Prior.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Hear'n-fallen, in station stood or just array, Milton.

Sublime with expectation
Their hearts were joind and sublime. Milton.

Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine.

5. Haughty; proud.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Watson.

SUBLIME. n. f. The grand or lofty style. The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Adams.

TO SUBLIME. v. a. [from sublimare, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chemical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me, Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Dante.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help; itself sublime, Denham.

Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flowers, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd. Milton.

To vital spirits aspire.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which even in the most sublimed intellectual is dangerously influential. Clarke.

Art

SUB

Art being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and to be sublimed into a pure genius which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature and that which is low in her. Dryden's Duffess.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that fun but on a part to thine; Shakespeare.

Which not alone the southern wit sublime,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

TO SUBLIME. v. n. To rise in the chemical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newt. Opt.
This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBLIMELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.

This fustian is to sublimely bad;

It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLIMITY. n. f. [from sublime; sublimitas, Fr. sublimitas, Lat.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divne sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hobbes.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind, nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Raleigh.

3. Sublimity of style or sentiment.
Milton's distinguishing excellency lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [from sublingualis, Fr. sub and lingua, Lat.] Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey on Conjunction.

SUBLUNAR. adj. [from sublunaris, Fr. sub and luna, Latin.] SUBLUNARY. } situated beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers, love,
Whole soul is love, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunary vault. Milton.

Through seas of knowledge we our course advance;
Discovering still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discoveries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess. Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon being not subject to chance, remained in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change. Dryden's Duffess.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies. Swift.

SUBMARINE. adj. [from sub and mare.] Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophyta affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals. Ray on the Creation.

TO SUBMERGE. v. a. [from submergere, Fr. submergo, Lat.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt were submerg'd and made A cistern for scald snakes. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

SUBMERSION. n. f. [from submergere, Fr. from submersus, Latin.] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean: which if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submerg'd. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO SUBMINISTER. } v. a. [from subministrare, Latin.] To supply.
TO SUBMINISTRATE. } ply; to afford. A word not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministrated unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Nothing subministrates matter to be converted into pestilent emanations, than steams of nasty folks. Harvey.

Our passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst of purposes. Locke.

SUBMISS. adj. [from submittere, Lat.] Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James mollified by the bishop's submiss, and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spoke with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

SUB

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet wit's submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, bowed low. Milton's Par. Lost.

Rising, but with awe,
In adorati'n at his feet I fell
Submiss: he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISSION. n. f. [from submittere, Fr. from submittere, Latin.]

Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a meer French word,
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakespeare.

2. Acknowledgement of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submissi n and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakespeare.
Great prince, by that submissi n you'll gain more Than e'er your haughty courage won before. Hallifax.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submissi n, as in offence. Shakespeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty than a perfect submissi n to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [from submittere, Lat.] Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent? Shakespeare.

Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thus with peaceful words upr'd. Milton.

Sudden from the golden throne,
With a submissive step I halted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submittere.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddesses,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryden's Æneid.
Speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;
Then pious silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. f. [from submittere.] Humility; confession of fault, or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Trailing gets pardon by *submissive*ness,
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story:
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from submittere.] Humbly; with submission.
Humility consists, not in wearing mean cloaths, and going softly and submissly, but in hearty mean opinion of thy self. Taylor.

TO SUBMIT. v. a. [from submittere, Fr. submittere, Latin.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hill submit it itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile,
And sometimes mounts, but to as billows play,
Whole rise not hinders, but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune flood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the land. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

SUB

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminious after-applications of their purposes. South's Sermons.

TO SUBSERVE. v. a. [from subserve, Latin.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,

But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intricacies of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSERVIENT. n. f. [from subserve.] Instrumental fitness

subservient, or use.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning, carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subservient to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subservient to infinite functions, any other wife than as the effect of contrivance.

There is an immediate and agill subservient of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hall's Origin. of Mankind.

There is a regular subordination and subservient among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [from subserviens, Latin.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them servicable to man. Roy.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members or parts, and they are his creatures subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton's Opticks.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art,

Still make the whole depend upon a prize;

They talk of principles, but notions prize;

And all to one low dolly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXTUPLE. adj. [from sub and sextuplus, Latin.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduplicate proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

TO SUBSIDE. v. n. [from subside, Latin.] To sink; to tend downwards.

He shook the sacred honours of his head

With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill;

And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews diffill. Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,

Weighs the mens wits against the lady's hair;

The doubtful beam long nods from side to side:

At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. n. f. [from subside.] The act of sinking; tendency downwards.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air-bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbutnot.

SUBSIDIARY. adj. [from subsidiarius, Lat. from sub and adi.] Assistant; brought in aid.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBSIDY. n. f. [from subsidio, Fr. subsidiarius, Latin.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy. Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquire, under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIDON. v. a. [from subsidio, Latin.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed before the conquest, but subsidon with crosses and single names without surnames. Camd.

TO SUBSIST. v. n. [from subsistere, Fr. subsistere, Latin.]

1. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but pollicite to swerve. Milton.

The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republic could subsist any longer. Swift.

2. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other mens charity. Atterbury.

3. To inhere; to have existence.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South's Sermon.

SUBSISTENCE. n. f. [from subsistere, Fr. from subsistere.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God began both at one instant, his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propole to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

SUBSISTENT. adj. subsistens, Latin.] Having real being.

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE. n. f. [from substantia, Fr. substantia, Latin.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone,

Springs not from sense, nor humours well agreeing,

Her nature is peculiar, and her own;

She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.

The strength of gods,

And this empyreal substance cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.

What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,

And substance.

Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance; or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

S U B

2. True; substantial; real; not merely seeming.
 O blessed! blessed night! I am afraid,
 Being in night, all this is but a dream;
 Too flattering sweet to be substantial. Shakespeare.
 To give thee being, I lent
 Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life. Milton.
 If happiness be a substantial good,
 Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
 I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge. Denham.
 Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immerg'd. Garville.
 The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. Elfrange.
 Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Woodward.
 A solid and substantial greatness of look, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude. Addison.
 3. Corporal; material.
 Now shine these planets with substantial rays?
 Does innate lustre give their measur'd days? Prior.
 The sun appears fast like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky, all which are gross falsehoods. Watts.
 4. Strong; stout; bulky.
Substantial doors,
 Cross-bard'd and bolted fast, fear no assault. Milton.
 5. Responsible; moderately wealthy.
 Trials of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders. Spenser on Ireland.
 The merchants, and substantial citizens, cannot make up more than a hundred thousand families. Addison on the War.
 SUBSTANTIALLY. n. f. [Without influence.] Essential parts.
 Although a custom introduced against the substantials of an appeal be not valid, as that it should not be appealed to a superior, but to an inferior judge, yet a custom may be introduced against the accidentals of an appeal. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 SUBSTANTIALLY. n. f. [from substantial.]
 1. The state of real existence.
 2. Corpority; materiality.
 Body cannot act on any thing but by motion; motion cannot be received but by quantity and matter: the soul is a stranger to such gross substantialities, and owns nothing of the Glanv. Sceps.
 SUBSTANTIALLY. adv. [from substantial.]
 1. In manner of a substance; with reality of existence.
 In him his Father thence substantially express'd. Milton.
 2. Strongly; solidly.
 Having to substantially provided for the North, they promised themselves they should end the war that Summer. Clarendon.
 3. Truly; solidly; really; with fixed purpose.
 The laws of this religion would make men, if they would truly observe them, substantially religious towards God, chaste and temperate. Tillotson.
 4. With competent wealth.
 SUBSTANTIALLYNESS. n. f. [from substantial.]
 1. The state of being substantial.
 2. Firmness; strength; power of holding or lasting.
 When substantiallyness combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, how can the language which consisteth of these found other than most full of sweetness? Camden's Remains.
 In degree of substantiallyness next above the doricque, sustaining the third, and adorning the second story. Wotton.
 To SUBSTANTIATE. v. a. [from substance.] To make to exist.
 The accidental of any act is said to be whatever advances to the act itself already substantiated. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 SUBSTANTIVE. n. f. [substantif, French; substantivum, Latin.]
 A noun betokening the thing, not a quality.
 Claudian perpetually clothes his sense at the end of a verse, commonly call'd golden, or two substantives and two adjectives with a verb between them. Dryden.
 SUBSTANTIVE. adj. [substantivus, Latin.]
 1. Solid; depending only on itself. Not in use.
 He considered how sufficient and substantive this land was to maintain itself, without any aid of the foreigner. Bacon.
 2. Betokening existence.
 One is oblig'd to join many particulars in one proposition, because the repetition of the substantive verb would be tedious. A. b.
 To SUBSTITUTE. v. a. [substitutus, Fr. substitutum, from sub- stantivus, Latin.] To put in the place of another.
 In the original defens of speaking, a man can substitute none for them that can equally conduct to his honour. Gow's Tongue.
 If a swarthy tongue
 Is underneath his humid palate hung,
 Reject him and substitute another. Dryden.
 Some few verbs are inferred or substituted in the room of others. Congreve.
 SUBSTITUTE. n. f. [substitut, Fr. from the verb.] One placed by another to act with delegated power.

S U B

- Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy ?
 — To him and his substitutes. Shakespeare
 You're taken up
 Under the countess's zeal of God,
 The subjects of his substitute, my father,
 And here upswarm'd them. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
 Hail thou not made me here thy substitute,
 And these inferior far beneath me set ?
 Providence delegates to the supreme magistrate the power for the good of men, which that supreme magistrate transfers to those substitutes who act under him. Milton SUBSTITUTION, n. f. [substitution, Fr. from substitute]. The act of placing any person or thing in the room of another;
 the state of being placed in the room of another.
 He did believe
 He was the duke, from substitution,
 And executing th' outward face of royalty,
 With all prerogative. Shakespeare, Temp.
 Nor salt, sulphur, or mercury can be separated from any perfect metals; for every part, so separated, may easily be reduced into perfect metal without substitution of that which chemists imagine to be wanting. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
TO SUBSTRATE, v. a. [substrate, Lat. substratio, French.]
 1. To take away part from the whole.
 2. To take one number from another.
SUBSTRATION, n. f. [substrains, substruction, French.]
 1. The act of taking away part from the whole.
 I cannot call this piece Tully's nor my own, being much altered not only by the change of the style, but by addition and substruction. Dequemi
 2. [In arithmetic.] The taking of a lesser number out of a greater of like kind, whereby to find out a third number, being or declaring the inequality, excess, or difference between the numbers given. Cocker's Arithmetick.
SUBSTRUCTION, n. f. [substruction, from sub and struo, Latin].
 Underbuilding.
 To found our habitation firmly, examine the bed of earth upon which we build, and then the underpillings, or substruction, as the ancients called it. Watson's Architecture.
SUBSTRY, AR. adj. [sub and stris]. Substry lay is, in dialling, a right line, whereon the gnomon or style of a dial is erected at right angles with the plane. Diet.
 Erect the style perpendicularly over the substry line, so as to make the angle with the dial-plane equal to the elevation of the pole of your place. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
SUBSULTORY, adj. [subsultus, Latin]. Bouncings; moving
SUBSULTORY, adj. by starts.
SUBSULTORILY, adv. [from subsultury]. In a bounding manner.
 The spirits spread even, and move not subsultorily for that will make the parts cloyse and pliant. Bacon's Natural History.
SUBTANGENT, n. f. In any curve, is the line which determines the intersection of the tangent in the axis prolonged. D.
TO SUBTEND, v. a. [sub and tendo, Latin]. To be extended under.
 In rectangles and triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle. Barrow.
 From Aries rightways draw a line, to end
 In the fame round, and let that line subtend
 An equal triangle : now finisce the lines
 Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs,
 Where e'er they meet in angles, those are triple. Orsch.
SUBTENSE, n. f. [sub and tensus, Latin]. The chord of an arch; that which is extended under any thing.
SUBTER, [Latin]. In composition, signifies under.
SUBTERFUG, adj. [subterfugio, Latin]. Running under.
SUBTERFUGOUS, adj. [subterfugio, French; subter and fugio, Lat.]
 A shift; an evasion; a trick.
 The king cared not for subterfuges, but would stand eye, and appear in any thing that was to his mind. Bacon.
 Notwithstanding all their fly subterfuges and studied evasions, yet the product of all their endeavours is but as the birth of the labouring mountains, wind and emptiness. Glauc.
 Affect not little shifts and subterfuges to avoid the force of an argument. Watson.
SUBTERRANEAL, adj. [sub and terra, Lat. subterraneus, Fr.
SUBTERRANEAN, adj. subterraneum or subterraneus is the word
SUBTERRANEANOUS, adj. now used.] Lying under the earth; placed SUBTERRANEARY, below the surface.
 Metals are wholly subterrany, whereas plants are part above earth, and part under. Bacon's Natural History.
 In subterrany, as the fathers of their tribes, are brimstone and mercury. Bacon's Natural History.
 The force
 Of subterranean wind transports a hill
 Torn from Pelorus, or the flatter'd side
 Of thund'ring Etna, whose combustible
 And fuel'd entrails these conceiving fire, Sublim'd with mineral fury, did the winds. Milton.

- Alteration proceeded from the change made in the neighbouring subterranean parts by that great conflagration. ▶ Boyle.
Tell by what paths, what subterranean ways,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The reluctant rivers. Blackmore.
Let my loft minutes glide obscurely on,
Like subterranean fires, unheard, unknown. Norris.
This subterranean passage was not at first designed for much for a highway as for a quarry. Addison.
Rous'd within the subterranean world,
Th' expanding earthquake unfrisked flames
Aflaring cities. Thomson.
SUBTERRANEAN. n. f. [jub and terra, Lat.] A place under ground. Not in use.
We commonly consider subterranean, not in contempla-tions, sufficiently respective unto the creation. Brown.
SUBTILE. adj. [subtile, Fr. subtilis, Lat.] This word is often written subtle.
1. Thin; not dense; not gross.

Retir'd, like subtle smoke dissolv'd in air. Dryden's Georg.
Deny Des Cart his subtile matter,
You leave him neither fire nor water. Prior.
Is not the heat conveyed through the vacuum by the vibrations of a much subtile medium than air, which, after the air was drawn out, remained in the vacuum? Newton's Opt.
2. Nice; fine; delicate; not coarse.
But of the clook which in our breasts we bear,
The subtile motions we forget the while.
Thou only know'st th' her nature, and her pow'r;
Her subtile form thou only can't define. Davies.
I do distinguish plain
Each subtile line of her immortal face. Davies.
3. Piercing; acute.
Pals we the flow disease and subtile pain,
Which our weak frame is defin'd to sustain;
The cruel fœton, the cold catarrh. Prior.
4. Cunning; artful; sly; sordulous. In this sense it is now commonly written subtle.
Arrius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subtile witted and a marvellous false spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hosker.
Think you this York
Was not incited by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you? Shakspeare, Richard III.
O subtile love, a thousand wiles thou hast
By humble flouts, by services, or by hire,
To win a maiden's hold. Fairfax.
A woman, an harlot and subtile of heart. Prov. vii. 10.
Nor thou th' malice, and false guile, condemn:
Subtile he needs must be, who could seduce
Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost.
5. Deceitful.
Like a bow! upon a subtle ground,
I've tumbled past the throw. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
6. Refined; acute beyond exactness.
Things remote from use, obscure and subtle. Milton.
SUBTILLY. adv. [from subtile.]
1. Finely; not grossly.
The constitution of the air appeareth more subtily by worms in oak-apples than to the sense of man. Bacon.
In these plasters the stone should not be too subtily powdered; for it will better manifest its attraction in more sensible dimensions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The opakeft bodies, if subtily divided, as metals dissolved in acid menstruums, become perfectly transparent. Newton.
2. Artfully; cunningly.
By grudging the add the reputation of loving the truth fincerly, that of having been able to expose it subtily. Bayle.

SUBVERSIVE. adj. [from subvert.] Having tendency to overturn.

Lying is a vice subversive of the very ends and design of conversation. Rogers.
To SUBVERT. v. a. [subverti, French; subverti, Latin.]
1. To overthrow; to overturn; to destroy; to turn upside down.

God, by things deem'd weak,
Subverts the worldly strong and worldly wife. Milton.
No proposition can be received for divine revelation, if contradictory to our clear intuitive knowledge; because this would subvert the principles of all knowledge. Locke.
Trees are subverted or broken by high winds. Mortimer.

2. To corrupt; to confound.
Strive not about words to no purpose, but to the subverting of the hearers. 2 Tim. ii. 14.

SUBVERTER. n. f. [from subvert.] Overthrower; destroyer.
O traitor! worse than Simon was to Troy;
O vile subverter of the Gallick reign,
More false than Gano was to Charlemagne. Dryden.

SUBURB. n. f. [suburbium, Latin.]
1. Building without the walls of a city.

There's a trim rabble let in: are all these your faithful friends of th' suburbs? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
What can be more to the disvaluation of the power of the Spaniard, than to have marched seven days in the heart of his country, and lodged three nights in the suburbs of his principal city? Bacon's War with Spain.

2. The confines; the outpart.

The suburbs of my jacket are so gone,
I have not left one skirt to fit upon. Cleopatra.
They on the smooth plank,
The suburbs of their strawbuilt citadel, Expatiate. Milton.

When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged, if they always stood in the suburbs and expectation of sorrows. Taylor.

SUBURBAN. adj. [suburbanus, Latin; from suburb.] Inhabiting the suburb.

Poor clinches the suburban muse affords. Dryden.

SUBWORKER. n. f. [sub and worker.] Underworker; subordinate helper.

He that governs well leads the blind; but he that teaches gives him eyes: and it is glorious to be a subworker to grace, in freeing it from some of the inconveniences of original sin. South.

SUCCESSORS. adj. [successarius, Lat.] Supplying the place of something else.

Nor is Jesus strictly to be believed when he prescribed the stone of the otter as a successarius unto calceum. Brown.

cessarius* experiment made with a common liquor. Boyle.

SUCCESSANUM. n. f. [Latin.] That which is put to serve for something else.

To SUCCEED. v. n. [succedere, French; succedere, Latin.]

1. To follow in order.

If I were now to die,
'Twere to be most happy; for I fear,
My soul hath her consent to absolute,
I hat not another comfort like to this
Succed in unknown fate. Shakespeare's Othello.

Those of all ages to succeed will curse my head. Milton.

Workmen let it cool by degrees in such relents of neal-ing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air in the room of the fire. Digby on Bodies.

Enjoy till I return
Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed. Milton.

If the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded to him in copartnership, without prelation or preference of the eldest to a double portion. Hale.

Revenge succeeds to love, and rage to grief. Dryden.

While day to night, and night to day succeeds,
Burn-off rings morn and evening shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temples shine. Dryden.

These dull harmless makers of lampoons are yet of dangerous example to the public: some witty men may succeed to their designs, and, mixing sense with malice, blast the reputation of the most innocent. Dryden.

The pretensions of Saul's family, who received his crown from the immediate appointment of God, ended with his reign; and David, by the same title, succeeded in his throne, to the exclusion of Jonathan. Locke.

2. To obtain one's wish; to terminate an undertaking in the desired effect.

'Tis almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition:
imagination must be raised by a desire of fame to a desire of pleasing. Dryden.

SUC

This address I have long thought owing; and if I had never attempted, I might have been vain enough to think I might have succeeded. Dryden.

A knave's a knave to me in ev'ry state;
Alike my scorn, if he succeeds or fail:
Sporus at court, or Japhet in a jail. Pope.

4. To terminate according to wish.

If thou deal truly, thy doings shall prosperously succeed to thee. Job. iv. 6.

5. To go under cover.

This was impossible for Virgil to imitate, because of the severity of the Roman language: Spencer endeavoured it in Shepherd's Kalender; but neither will it succeed in English. Dry.

Please that filvan scene to take,
Where whistling winds uncertain shadows make;
Or will you to the cooler cave succeed,
Whole mouth the curling vines have overspread. Dryden.

To SUCCEED. v. a.

1. To follow; to be subsequent or consequent to.

In that place no creature was hurtful unto man, and those destructive effects they now discover succeeded the curse, and came in with thorns and briars. Irving's Vulgar Errors.

2. To prosper; to make successful.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among;
And high-raised Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his planet hung.
Will gloriously the new laid works succeed. Dryden.

Succeed my wish, and second my design,
The fairest Deiopeia shall be thine,
And make thee father of a happy line. Dryden's Zen.

SUCCESSER. n. f. [from succeed.] One who follows; one who comes into the place of another.

Why should calamity be full of words?
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airs successers of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries! Shakespeare's R. III.

Now this great successer all repairs,
He builds up strength and greatness for his heirs,
Out of the virtues that adorn'd his blood. Daniel.

Nature has so far imprinted it in us, that should the envy of predecessors deny the secret to successers, they yet would find it out.

They make one man's particular fancies, perhaps failings, confining laws to others; and convey them to their successers, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness as presumption. Boyle.

SUCCESS. n. f. [success, French; successus, Latin.]

1. The termination of any affair happy or unhappy. Success without any epithet is commonly taken for good success.

For good success of his hands, he asketh ability to do of him that is most unable. Wisd. xiii. 19.

Perplex'd and troubled at his bad success
The tempter flood. Milton.

Not Lemuel's mother with more care
Did counsel or instruct her heir;
Or teach, with more success, her son
The vices of the time to shun. Waller.

Every reasonable man cannot but wish me success in this attempt, because I undertake the proof of that which it is every man's interest that it should be true. Tillotson's Sermons.

Whillt malice and ingratitude confests,
They've strove for ruin long without success. Garrh.
Gas sulphuris may be given with success in any disease of the lungs. Arbutnot on Diet.

Military successes, above all others, elevate the minds of a people. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Succession. Obsolete.

All the sons of these five brethren reigned
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents, the crown retained. Spenser.

SUCCESSFUL. adj. [success, and full.] Prosperous; happy; fortunate.

They were terrible alarms to persons grown wealthy by a long and successful imposture, by persuading the world that men might be honest and happy, though they never mortified any corrupt appetites. South's Sermons.

H' observ'd the illustrious throng,
Their names, their fates, their conduct and their care. Dryden.
In peaceful fenates and successful war.

The early hunter
Blesses Diana's hand, who leads him safe
O'er hanging cliffs; who spreads his net successful,
And guides the arrow through the panther's heart. Prior.

SUCCESSFULLY. adv. [from successful.] Prosperously; luckily; fortunately.

He is too young, yet he looks successfully. Shakespeare.
They would wait a competent instrument to collect and convey their rays successfully, or so as to imprint the species with any vigour, on a dull prejudicate faculty. Hammond.

The rule of imitating God can never be successfully presented but upon Christian principles; such as that this world is a place not of rest, but of discipline. Atterbury.
A reformation

SUCCESSFULNESS. n. f. [from successful.] Happy conclusion; desired event; series of good fortune.

An opinion of the successfulness of the work is as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as the authority of commands, or the persuasiveness of promises. Hammond.

SUCCESSION. n. f. [successio, French; successio, Latin.]

1. Consecution; series of one thing or person following another.

St. Augustine, having reckoned up a great number of the bishops of Rome, faith, in all this order of succession of bishops there is not one found a Donatist. Hooker.

Reflection on appearances of several ideas, one after another, in our minds, furnishes us with the idea of succession. Locke.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, and take with it any limb of a man, it is clear that it must strike successively the two files of the room, touch one part of the flesh first,
and another after, and so in succession. Locke.

2. A series of things or persons following one another.

These decays in Spain have been occasioned by so long a war with Holland; but most by two successions of inactive princes. Bacon.

The smallest particles of matter may cohere by the strongest attractions, and compose bigger particles of weaker virtue;
and many of these may cohere and compose bigger particles, whose virtue is still weaker; and so on for divers successions, until the progression end in the biggest particles, on which the operations in chymistry and the colours of natural bodies depend. Newton's Opt.

3. A lineage; an order of descendants.

Cassibelan,
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute. Shakespeare's Cymbel.
A long succession must ensue;
And his next son the clouded ark of God
Shall in a glorious temple enshrine. Milt. Par. Lost.

4. The power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancursors.

What people is so void of common sense,
To vote succession from a native prince? Dryden.

SUCCESSIVE. adj. [successivus, French.]

1. Following in order; continuing a course or consecution uninterrupted.

Three with fiery courage he assails,
And each successive after other quails,
Still wond'ring whence so many kings should rise. Daniel.

God hat rest,
Labour and rest, as day and night, to men
Successive. Milt. Par. Lost.

God, by reason of his eternal indivisible nature, is by one single act of duration present to all the successive portions of time, and all successively existing in them. South.

Send the successive ills through ages down,
And let each weeping father tell his son. Prior.

2. Inherited by succession. Not in use.

Countrymen,
Plead my successive title with your swords.
Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

The empire being elective, and not successive, the emperors, in being, made profit of their own times. Raleigh.

SUCCESSIVELY. adv. [successivem, Fr. from successive.] In uninterrupted order; one after another.

Three sons he left,
All which successively by turns did reign. Fairy Queen.
Is it upon record? or else reported
Successively from age to age? Shakespeare's Richard III.

That king left only by his fix wives three children, who reigned successively, and died childless. Bacon.

We that measure times by first and last,
The fight of things successively do take,
When God on all at once his view doth cast,
And of all times doth but one instant make. Davies.

I inclined the paper to the rays very obliquely, that the most refrangible rays might be more copiously reflected than the rest, and the whiteness at length changed successively into blue, indigo, and violet. Newton's Opt.

No such motion of the same atom can be all of it existant at once: it must needs be made gradually and successively, both as to place and time, seeing that body cannot at the same instant be in more places than one. Bentley's Sermons.

SUCCESSIVENESS. n. f. [from successive.] The state of being successive.

All the notion we have of duration is partly by the successive-ness of its own operations, and partly by those external measures that it finds in motion. Hale.

 That to afflictions does the bridle lend;
 In their beginning they are weak and wan,
 But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end. Fairy Queen.

Some villains of my court
 Are in content and sufferance in this. Shakespeare.

Both gloried to have 'cap'd the Stygian flood,
 As gods, and by their own recover'd strength;
 Not by the sufferance of supernal pow'r. Milton's Par. Lost.

SUFFERER, n. s. [from suffer.]
 1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,
 The sufferers then will scarce molest us here,
 From other hands we need not much to fear. Milton.

And when his love was bounded in a few,
 That were unhappy that they might be true,
 Made you the favourite of his last sad times,
 That is, a sufferer in his subjects crime. Dryden.

She returns to me with joy in her face, not from the sight of her husband, but from the good luck she has had at cards; and if she has been a loser, I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate. Addison's Spectator.

2. One who allows; one who permits.
SUFFERING, n. s. [from suffer.] Pain suffered.

Rejoice in my sufferings for you. Col. i. 24.

With what strength, what steadiness of mind,
 He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings? Addison.

 That ever-bubbling spring, the sugar'd nest
 Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,
 Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crashaw.

2. To sweeten.
 Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
 In general riot, and never learn'd
 The icy precepts of respect, but followed
 The sugar'd game before thee. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

With devotion's visage,
 And pious actions we do sugar o'er
 The devil himself. Shakespeare.

His glowing fire his errand daily laid,
 And sugar'd speeches whisper'd in mine ear. Paisley.

Who casts out threats, no man deceives,
 But flatter'st still in sugar'd words betrays,
 And poison in high tasted meats conveys. Durham.

SUGGARY, adj. [from sugar.] Sweet; tasting of sugar.
 With the suggary sweet thereof allure
 Chaste ladies ears to phantasies impure. Spenser.

To SUGGEST, v. a. [from suggere, suggere, Lat. suggerere, Fr.]
 1. To hint; to intimate; to insinuate good or ill; to tell privately.

Are you not ashamed?
 What spirit suggests this imagination? Shakespeare.

I could never have suffered greater calamities, by denying to sign that justice my conscience suggested to me. K. Charles.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something to them, which shall satisfy their minds notwithstanding a known, actual, avowed continuance of their sins. South's Sermons.

Some ideas make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflexion. Locke.

Reflect upon the different state of the mind in thinking, which those instances of attention, reverie and dreaming naturally enough suggest. Locke.

Search for some thoughts thy own suggesting mind,
 And others dictated by heav'nly pow'r,
 Shall rise spontaneous. Pope's Odyssey.

This the feeling heart
 Would naturally suggest. Thomson.

2. To seduce; to draw to ill by insinuation. Out of use.
 When devils will their blackest fins put on,
 They do suggest at first with heav'nly shows. Shakespeare.

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
 I nightly lodge her in an upper tower. Shakespeare.

3. To inform secretly. Out of use.
 We must suggest the people, in what hatred
 He still hath held them, that to's pow'r he would Have made them mules. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

SUGGESTION, n. s. [from suggestio, Fr. from suggestio.] Private hint; intimation; insinuation; secret notification.

It allayeth all base and earthly cogitations, banisheth and driveth away those evil secret suggestions which our invisible enemy is always apt to minister. Hooker.

I met lord Bigot and lord Salisbury,
 And other more going to seek the grave
 Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to night
 On your suggestion. Shakespeare's King John.

He was a man
 Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
 Himself with princes: one that by suggestion
 Tied all the kingdom. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The native and untaught suggestions of inquisitive children. Locke.

Another way is letting the mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, run after fancies. Locke.

To SUGGILATE, v. a. [from sugillare, Latin.] To beat black and blue; to make livid by a bruise.

The head of the os humeri was bruised, and remained sugillated long after. Wise's Surgery.

SUICIDE, n. s. [from suicidium, Latin.] Self-murder; the horrid crime of destroying one's self.

Child of despair, and suicide

SUI

- SUIT. n. f. [suite, French.]
1. A set; a number of things correspondent one to the other.
We, ere the day, two suits of armour fought,
Which borne before him, on his steed he brought. Dryd.
  2. Cloaths made one part to answer another.
What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits is wonderful. Shakespeare's Henry V.
  3. Confection; series; regular order.
Every five and thirty years the same kind and suite of weathers comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime. Bacon.
  4. Out of Suits. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.
That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shak.
Plexirtus's ill-led life, and worse gotten honour, should have rumbled together to destruction, had there not come in Ty-deus and Telenor, with fifty in their suits to his defence. Sidney.
  5. [Suite, French.] Retinue; company. Obsolete.
Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Shakespeare.
She gallops o'er a courtier's nose;
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit. Shakespeare.
Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.
Many shall make suit unto thee. Shakespeare.
My mind, neither with pride's itch, nor yet hath been Poison'd with love to see or to be seen;
I had no suit there, nor new suit to thee:
Yet went to court. Donne.
  6. [From To Sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.
He that hath the steering of my course,
Direct my suit. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Their determinations are to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suits, unless you may be won by some other fort than your father's imposition. Shakespeare.
  7. Courtship.
High amongst all knights hath hung thy shield,
Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest thine.
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.
  8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit; prosecution.
Some rank deity, whose filthy face
We suitably o'er stinking stables place. Dryden.
  9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgment. Asylife.
All that had any suits in law came unto them. Sylva.
Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause.
Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great persons. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
  10. To suit; to adapt to something else.
To Alibech alone refer your suit,
And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.
John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.
  11. To suit; to adapt to something else.
Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are so *suit*ed to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.
  12. To be fitted to; to become.
Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.
Her purple habit fits with such a grace
On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.
If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would set down only such as *suit*ed their distinct hypotheses. Locke.
Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.
  13. To dress; to clothe.
Such a Sebastian was my brother, too,
So went he *suit*ed to his watry tomb:
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Be better *suit*ed;
These weeds are memories of those misfortunes;
I'll disrobe me. Shakespeare.
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As do's a Briton peasant. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

SUII

- SUIT. n. m. To agree; to accord.
- The one intente, the other still remits;
Cannot well suit with either; but soon prove Tediuous alike. Shakespeare's Henry V.
- The place itself was *suit*ing to his care,
Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair.
Pity does with a noble nature suit.
Confract does ill with love and beauty suit.
This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not.
- Give me not an office
That suits with me to ill; thou know'st my temper. Addi.
- SUITABLE. adj. [from suit.] Fitting; according with; agreeable to.
- Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affliction.
What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state.
- To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hook.
It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman Church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.
- As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity.
- Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.
- SUITABLENESS. n. f. [from suitable.] Fiteness; agreeableness.
In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glavin.
- With ordinary minds, it is the suitablest, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first.
- He creates those sympathies and suitableness of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together.
- Consider the laws themselves, and their suitableness or un*suitableness* to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.
- SUITABLY. adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.
Whoever speaks upon a certain occasion may take any text suitable thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text.
South's Sermon.
- Some rank deity, whose filthy face
We suitably o'er stinking stables place. Dryden.
- SUIT COVENANT. [In law.] Is where the ancestor of one man has covenanted with the ancestor of another to sue at his court.
- SUIT COURT. [In law.] Is the court in which tenants owe attendance to their lord.
- SUIT SERVICE. [In law.] Attendance which tenants owe to the court of their lord.
- SUITER. n. f. [from suit.]
1. One that sues; a petitioner; a supplicant.
As humility is in *suit*er a decent virtue, so the rectification thereof, by such effectual acknowledgments, not only argues a sound apprehension of his supereminent glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hook.
Cut off by course of justice. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
My piteous soul began the wretchedness.
Of suiters at court to mourn,
Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hand of suitors also from offering. Donne.
Yet their port
Not of mean suiters; nor important less Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair,
Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to restore
The race of mankind drown'd before the shrine
Of Themis flood devout. Milton's Paradise Lost.
I challenge nothing;
But I'm an humble *suit*er for these prisoners.
My lord, I come an humble *suit*er to you.
2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.
I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart;
for truly I love none.
A dear happiness to women! they would else have been troubled with a pernicious *suit*er. Shakespeare.
He pass'd a year at Goodby under the counsels of his mother, and then became a *suit*er at London to Sir Roger Ashton's daughter. Watson's Life of the Duke of Buckingham.
By many suiters fought, she mocks their pains.
And still her vow'd virginity maintains. Dryden.
He drew his feat, familiar, to her side,
Far from the *suit*er train, a brutal crowd. Pope's Odyssey.

SUII

- SUITRESS. n. f. [from suiter.] A female supplicant.
- That could refuse a boon to such a suitress,
Y' have got a noble friend to be your advocate. Rowe.
- SULCATED. adj. [sulcus, Latin.] Furrowed.
- All are much chopped and sulcated by their having lain exposed on the top of the clay to the weather, and to the erosion of the vitriolick matter mixed amongst the clay. Woodward.
- SULL. n. f. A plough.
- SULLEN. adj. [Of this word the etymology is obscure.]
1. Gloomily angry; sullenly discontented.
Will not continued still sullen and perverse, and every day grew more insolent. Clarendon.
A man in a jail is sullen and out of humour at his first coming in. DeFrange.
Fore'd by my pride, I my concern suppress'd;
Pretended drowsiness, and wish of rest;
And sullen I forsook th' imperfect feast. Prior.
If we sit down sullen and inactive, in expectation that God should do all, we shall find ourselves miserably deceived. Rog.
  2. Mischievous; malignant.
Such sullen planets at my birth did shine,
They threaten every fortune mixt with mine. Dryden.
The sullen fiend her founding wings display'd,
Unwilling left the night, and sought the nether shade. Dryd.
  3. Intractable; obstinate.
Things are as sullen as we are, and will be what they are,
whatever we think of them. Tillotson's Sermon.
  4. Gloomy; dark; cloudy; dismal.
Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight? Shak. H. VI.
Night with her sullen wings to double shade,
The desert fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam. Milt.
A glimpse of moon-shine, streak'd with red;
A fluff'd, sullen, and uncertain light,
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again. Dryden.
No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows;
The dreared East is all the wind that blows. Pope.
  5. Heavy; dull; sorrowful.
Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen preface of your own decay. Shakespeare's K. John.
- SULLENLY. adv. [from sullen.] Gloomily; malignantly; in-tractably.
- To say they are framed without the assistance of some principle that has wisdom in it, and that they come to pass from chance, is sullenly to assert a thing because we will assert it.
- He in chains demanded more;
Than he impos'd in victory before.
He sullenly reply'd, he could not make
I hee offers now. Dryden's Indian Emperor.
- The gen'l mens his weary pace,
And sullenly to his revenge he falls;
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.
- SULLENNESS. n. f. [from sullen.] Gloominess; moroseness;
sullen anger; malignity; intractability.
Speech being as rare as precious, her silence without sullen-ness, her modesty without affectation, and her shamefastness without ignorance.
- To fit my sullenness,
He to another key his stile doth dress.
In those vernal seasons, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury and sullenness against nature not to go out, and see her riches. Milton.
Quit not the world out of any hypocrisy, sullenness, or superstition, but out of a sincere love of true knowledge and virtue.
With these comforts about me, and sullenness enough to use no remedy, monsieur Zulichem came to see me. Temple.
- SULLENS. n. f. [Without singular.] Morose temper; gloomi-ness of mind. A burlesque word.
- Let them die that age, and sullens have. Shakespeare.
- SULLIAGE. n. f. [from sully.] Pollution; filth; stain of dirt;
foulness.
- Require it to make some restitution to his neighbour for what it has detracted from it, by wiping off that sullage it has cast upon his fame. Government of the Tongue.
Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sullage behind. Decay of Piety.
- To SULLY, v. a. [souiller, French.] To soil; to tarnish; to dirt; to spot.
- Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding. Bacon.
The falling temples which the gods provoke,
And statues sully'd yet with sacrilegious smoke. Reformation.
He's dead, whose love had sully'd all your reign;
And made you emperors of the world in vain. Dryden.
Lab'ring years shall weep their destin'd race,
Charg'd with ill omens, sully'd with disgrace. Prior.

SUM

- Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this solen-nity. Atterbury's Sermons.
- Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Three sullying trades avoid with equal care;
The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng. Gay.
- SULLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Soil; tarnish; spot.
- You laying these light sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working. Shakespeare.
A noble and triumphant merit breaks through little spots and sullies in his reputation. Addison's Spectator.
- SULPHUR. n. f. [Latin.] Brimstone.
- In his womb was hid metallick ore,
The work of sulphur. Milton.
Sulphur is produced by incorporating an oily or bituminous matter with the fossil and salt. Woodward.
Thence nitre, sulphur, and the fiery steam
Of fat bitumen. Thompson.
- SULPHUREOUS. adj. [sulphureus, Latin.] Made of brimstone; having the qualities of brimstone;
containing sulphur; impregnated with sulphur.
My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire. Milton.
Is not the strength and vigour of the action between light and sulphureous bodies, observed above, one reason why sul-phureous bodies take fire more readily, and burn more vehemently than other bodies do? Newton's Opt.
- The fury heard, while on Cocytus' brink,
Her snakes uny'd sulphureous waters drink. Pope.
No sulphureous glooms
Swell'd in the sky, and sent the lightning forth. Thomson.
- SULPHUREOUSNESS. n. f. [from sulphureous.] The state of being sulphureous.
- SULPHURWORT. n. f. The same with HOGSFENEL.
- SULPHURY. adj. [from sulphur.] Partaking of sulphur.
- SULTAN. n. f. [Arabic.] The Turkish emperor.
- By this scimitar,
That won three fields of sultan Solymen. Shakespeare.
- SULTANA. n. f. [from sultan.] The queen of an Eastern SULTANESS. } emperor.
- Turn the sultan's chambermaid. Clarendon.
Lay the tow'ring sultaness aside. Irene.
- SULTANRY. n. f. [from sultan.] An Eastern empire.
I affirm the fame of the sultanry of the Mamelukes, where slaves, bought for money, and of unknown descent, reigned over families of freemen. Bacon.
- SULTRINESS. n. f. [from sultry.] The state of being sultry;
close and cloudy heat.
- SULTRY. adj. [This is imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from sulphury, or sultry.] Hot without ventilation; hot and close; hot and cloudy.
It is very sultry and hot. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
The sultry breath
Of tainted air had cloy'd the jaws of death. Sandys.
Such as born beneath the burning sky,
And sultry sun betwixt the tropicks lie,
Our foe advances on us.
And envies us even Libya's sultry deserts.
Then would sultry heats and a burning air have scorched and chapp'd the earth, and galled the animal tribes in houses or dens. Cheyne.
- SUM. n. f. [summa, Latin; summe, French.]
1. The whole of any thing; many particulars aggregated to a total.
We may as well conclude so of every sentence, as of the whole sum and body thereof. Hooker.
How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them. Pf. cxxxix. 17.
Th' Almighty Father, where he sits Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heav'n secure,
Consulting on the sum of things, foreseen
This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd.
Such and no less is he, on whom depends
The sum of things. Dryden.
Weighing the sum of things with wife forecast,
Solicitous of publick good. Philips.
  2. Quantity of money.
I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you deny'd me. Shakespeare.
Britain, once despis'd, can raise
As ample sums as Rome in Caesar's days. C. Arbutnot.
  3. [Somme, Fr.] Compendium; abridgement; the whole abstracted.
This, in effect, is the sum and substance of that which they bring by way of opposition against those orders, which we have common with the church of Rome. Hooker.
They replenish'd the hearts of the nearest unto them with words of memorable consolation, strengthened men in the fear of God, gave them wholesome instructions of life, and confirmed them in true religion: in sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to live, than they had done before how to live. Hooker.
This.

SUM

This having learn'd, thou hast attain'd the sum.
Of wisdom.
In sum, no man can have a greater veneration for Chaucer than myself.
Thy sum of duty let two words contain;
Be humble, and be just.
In sum, the Gospel, considered as a law, prescribes every virtue to our conduct, and forbids every sin.
4. The amount; the result of reasoning or computation.
I appeal to the readers, whether the sum of what I have said be not this.
5. Height; completion.
Thus I have told thee all my state, and brought
My story to the sum of earthly bliss,
Which I enjoy.
In saying ay or no, the very safety of our country, and the fun of our well-being, lies.
To SUM, v. a. [summer, French; from the noun.]
1. To compute; to collect particulars into a total; to cast up.
It has up emphatical.
You cast th' event of war,
And *sum*d th' account of chance.
The high priest may sum the silver brought in, 2 Kings xxii.
In sickness time will seem longer without a clock than with it; for the mind doth value every moment, and then the hour doth rather sum up the moments than divide the day.
He that would reckon up all the accidents preferences depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or sum up infinity.
2. To comprise; to comprehend; to collect into a narrow compass.
So lovely fair!
That what seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her *sum*d up, in her contain'd.
To conclude, by summing up what I would say concerning what I have, and what I have not been, in the following paper I shall not deny that I pretended not to write an accurate treatise of colours, but an occasional essay.
Go to the ant, thou sluggard, in few words sums up the moral of this fable.
This Atlas must our sinking state uphold;
In council cool, but in performance bold:
He sums their virtues in himself alone,
And adds the greatest, of a loyal son.
A fine evidence *sum*d up among you!
4. [In falconry.] To have feathers full grown.
With prosperous wing full *sum*d.
SUN-MACH-TREE. n. f. [sunach, French.]
The flower consists of five leaves in a circular order, in form of a rose; from whose flower-cup rises the point, which afterward becomes a vessel, containing one seed: the flowers grow in bunches, and the leaves either winged or have three lobes. The flowers are used in dying, and the branches for tanning, in America.
SUN-LESS. adj. [from sun.] Not to be computed.
Make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the busy bottom of the sea.
With finken wreck and sunless treasures.
A sunless journey of incorporeal speed.
The sunless treasure of exhausted mines.
SUN-MARILY. adv. [from summary.] Briefly; the shortest way.
The decalogue of Moses declareth summary those things which we ought to do; the prayer of our Lord, whatsoever we should request or desire.
While we labour for these demonstrations out of Scripture, and do summary declare the things which many ways have been spoken, be contented quietly to hear, and do not think my speech tedious.
When the parties proceed summary, and they chuse the ordinary way of proceeding, the cause is made plenary.
SUN-MARY. adj. [summaire, French; from sum.] Short; brief; compendious.
The judge
Directed them to mind their brief,
Nor spend their time to frown their reading.
She'd have a summary proceeding.
SUN-MARY. n. f. [from the adj.] Compendium; abridgments.
We are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to shew in articles.
In that comprehensive summary of our duty to God, there is no express mention thereof.
SUMMER. n. f. [summer, Saxon; sumer, Dutch.]
1. The season in which the sun arrives at the higher solstice.
Sometimes hath the brightest day a cloud;
And, after summer, evermore succeeds
The barren winter with his nipping cold.
Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder?

SUM

Two hundred leaves of bread, and an hundred bunches of raisins, and an hundred of summer fruits.
He was sitting in a summer parlour.
In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride.
They marl and sow it with wheat, giving it a summer fallowing first, and next year sow it with pease.
Dry weather is best for most summer corn.
The dazzling roofs,
Replenish'd as the blaze of summer noon,
Or the pale radiance of the midnight moon.
Child of the sun,
See sultry summer comes.
2. [Trabs summeria.] The principal beam of a floor.
Oak, and the like true heavy timber, may be better trusted in crofts and transverse works for summers, or girders, or building beams.
Then enter'd sun, and with that summer,
Whole leaves first shelter'd man from drought and dew,
Working and winding flily evermore,
The inward walls and summers cleft and tore;
But grace shor'd these, and cut that as it grew.
To SUMMER. v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the summer.
The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts shall winter upon them.
To SUMMER. v. a. To keep warm.

England and metropolitan, has a supereminence, and even some power over the archbishop of York. Ayliffe's Paragon SUPEREMINENT. adj. [from super and eminens.] Eminent in a high degree.
As humility is in suiters a decent virtue, so the testification thereof by such effectual acknowledgments not only argueth a found apprehension of his supereminence glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hosker
To SUPEREROGATE. v. n. [from super and erogato, Lat.] To do more than duty requires.
So by an supererogation of late,
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if she had the misapprehension of late. Clarendon
Aristotle acted his own instructions, and his obsequious fectators have supererogated in observance. Glavin's Scipio SUPEREROGATION. n. s. [from supererogato.] Performance of more than duty requires.
There is no such thing as works of supererogation; that no man can do more than needs, and is his duty to do, by way of preparation for another world. Tillotson's Sermons SUPEREROGATORY. adj. [from supererogato.] Performed beyond the strict demands of duty.

Supererogatory services, and too great benefits from subjects to kings, are of dangerous consequence. Hewel SUPEREXCELLENT. adj. [from super and excellens.] Excellent beyond common degrees of excellence.
We discern not the abuse: suffer him to persuade us that we are as gods, something to superexcellens, that all must revereence and adore. Deery of Piety SUPEREXCELLENCE. n. s. [from super and excellens.] Something superfluously growing.
As the clear separated between the scarifications, I rubbed the superexcellence of flesh with the vitriol stone. Wijeman
To SUPERFATE. v. n. [from super and fatus, Latin.] To conceive after conception.
The female brings forth twice in one month, and so is said to superfate, which, faith Aristotle, is because her eggs are hatched in her one after another. Grew's Museum SUPERFETATION. n. s. [from superfatus, French; from superfe- tate.] One conception following another, so that both are in the womb together, but come not to their full time for delivery together.
Superfation must be by abundance of sap in the bough that putteth it forth. Bacon's Natural History
If the superfation be made with considerable intermission, the latter most commonly becomes abortive; for the first being confirmed, engrotheth the aliment from the other. Brown SUPERFICE. n. s. [from superficies, Fr. superficies, Latin.] Outside; surface.
Then if it rise not to the former height
Of superfices, conclude that soil is light. Dryden
SUPERFICIAL. adj. [from superficialis, Fr. from superficies, Latin.]
1. Lying on the surface; not reaching below the surface.
That, upon the superficial ground, heat and moisture cause putrefaction, in England is found not true. Bacon
From these phenomena several have concluded some general rupture in the superficial parts of the earth. Burnet
There is not one infidel living so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of light, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley
2. Shallow; contrived to cover something.
This superficial tale
Is but a preface to her worthy praise. Shakespeare
3. Shallow; not profound; mattering, not learned.
That knowledge is so very superficial, and so ill-grounded, that it is impossible for them to describe in what consists the beauty of those works. Dryden SUPERFICIALITY. n. s. [from superficialis.] The quality of being superficial.
By these fals the colours of bodies receive degrees of lustre or obscurity, superficiality or profundity. Brown
SUPERFICIALLY. adv. [from superficialis.]
1. On the surface; not below the surface.
2. Without penetration; without close heed.
Perspective hath been with some diligence inquired; but the nature of sounds in general hath been superficially observed. Bacon's Natural History
His eye to superficially surveys
These things, as not to mind from whence they grow, Deep under ground. Milton's Paradise Lost
3. Without going deep; without searching to the bottom of things.
You have said well;
But on the cause and question now in hand,
Have glaz'd but superficially. Shakespeare
I have laid down superficially my present thoughts. Dryden
SUPERFICIALNESS. n. s. [from superficialis.]
1. Shallowness; position on the surface.
2. Slight knowledge; false appearance; show without substance.
SUPERFICIES. n. s. [Latin.] Outside; surface; superface.
He on her superficies stretch'd his line.
A convex mirror makes objects in the middle to come out from the superficies: the painter must, in respect of the light and shadows of his figures, give them more relieve. Dryden
SUPERFINE. adj. [from super and fine.] Eminently fine.
Some, by this journey of Jalon, understand the mystery of the philosopher's stone: to which also other superfine chymists draw the twelve labours of Hercules. L'Estrange
If you observe your cyder, by interposing it between a candle and your eye, to be very transparent, it may be called superfine. Mortimer's Husbandry
SUPERFLUANCE. n. s. [from super and fluitans, Latin.] The act of floating above.
Sperma ceti, which is a superfluitance on the sea, is not the spem of a whale. Brown's Vulgar Errors
SUPERFLUITANT. adj. [from superfluitans, Lat.] Floating above.
A chalky earth, beaten and steeped in water, affordeth a cream or fatness on the top, and a gross substance at the bottom: out of the cream, or superfluitance, the finest dishes are made; out of the residue, the coarser. Brown SUPERFLUITY.

At the kindling of the fire, and lighting of candles, they say certain prayers, and use some other superstitious rites, which shew that they honour the fire and the light. Spenser.

Been out of fondness superstitious to him?
And am I thus rewarded?
Nature's own work it seem'd it, Nature taught art,
And to a superstitious eye the haunt
Of wood-gods and wood-nymphs. Milton.

Where rites divine were paid, whose holy hair
Was kept and cut with superstitious care. Dryden.
2. Over accurate; scrupulous beyond need.

SUPERSTITIOUSLY, adv. [from superstitious.] In a superstitious manner.

There reigned in this island a king, whose memory of all others we most adore; not superstitiously, but as a divine instrument. Bacon.

Neither of these methods should be too scrupulously, and superstitiously pursued. Watts's Logic.

TO SUPERSTRAIN, v. a. [super and strain.] To strain beyond the just stretch.

In the straining of a string, the further it is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note. Bacon.

TO SUPERSTRUCT, v. a. [superstruere, superstruere, Latin.] To build upon any thing.

Two notions of fundamentals may be conceived, one signifying that whereon our eternal bliss is immediately superstructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Christ is founded. Hammond.

If his habit of sin have not corrupted his principles, the virtuous Christian may think it reasonable to reform, and the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation. Hammond's Fundamentals.

This is the only proper basis on which to superstruct first innocence and then virtue. Decay of Piety.

SUPERSTRUCTION, n. f. [from superstruct.] An edifice raised on any thing.

I want not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead; and my own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstructures upon an old ruin. Denham.

SUPERSTRUCTIVE, adj. [from superstruct.] Built upon something else.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, must necessarily resolve, that what were drunkenness in another, is not so in him, and nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructive, be it never so gross. Hammond.

SUPERSTRUCTURE, n. f. [super and structure.] That which is raised or built upon something else.

He who builds upon the present, builds upon the narrow compass of a point; and where the foundation is so narrow, the superstructure cannot be high and strong too. Saunders's Sermons.

Purgatory was not known in the primitive church; and is a superstructure upon the Christian religion. Tillotson.

You have added to your natural endowments the superstructures of study. Dryden.

SUPERSUBSTANTIAL, adj. [super and substantial.] More than substantial.

SUPERVACANEOUS, adj. [supervacaneus, Lat.] Superfluous; needless; unnecessary; serving to no purpose. Dryden.

SUPERVACANEOUSLY, adv. [from the adjective.] Needlessly.

SUPERVACANEOUSNESS, n. f. [from the adjective.] Needlessness.

TO SUPERVENE, v. n. [supervenire, Lat.] To come as an extraneous addition.

Such a mutual gravitation can never supervene to matter, unless impressed by a divine power. Bentley's Sermons.

SUPERVENIENT, adj. [supervenientis, Latin.] Added; additional.

If it were unjust to murder John, the supervenient oath did not extenuate the fact, or oblige the juror unto it. Brown.

That branch of belief was in him supervenient to Christian practice, and not all Christian practice built on that. Ham.

SUPERVENTION, n. f. [from supervene.] The act of supervening.

TO SUPERVISE, v. a. [super and visus, Latin.] To overlook; to oversee; to intend.

M. Bayle speaks of the vexation of the supervisors of the press, in terms of feeling that they move compassion. Congreve.

SUPERVISOR, n. f. [from superviser.] An overseer; an inspector; a superintendent.

A supervisor may signify an overseer of the poor, an inspector of the customs, a surveyor of the high ways, a supervisor of the excise. Watts's Logic.

How satisty'd, my lord!

Would you be supervisors, grossly gape on? Shakespeare.

I am informed of the author and supervisors of this pamphlet. Dryden.

TO SUPERVISE, v. n. [super and visus, Lat.] To oversee; to outlive.

Upon what principle can the soul be imagined to be naturally mortal, or what revolutions in nature will it not be able to resist and superlive. Spenser.

SUPINATION, n. f. [supinationis, Fr. from supinare, Latin.] The act of lying with the face upward. Spenser.

SUPINE, adj. [supinus, Latin.] Lying on the back; lying on the face upward. Spenser.

1. Lying with the face upward. Spenser.

Upon these divers positions in man, wherein the spine can only be as right lines with the thigh, arise those remarkable postures, prone, supine, and erect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

At him he lanc'd his spear, and pierc'd his breast;
On the hard earth the Lycian knock'd his head. Spenser.

And lay supine; and forth the spirit fled. Spenser.

What advantage hath a man by this erection above other animals, the faces of most of them being more supine than ours. Spenser.

2. Laying backwards with exposure to the sun. Spenser.

On rising ground be plac'd or hills supine,
Extend thy loose battalions. Spenser.

3. Negligent; careless; indolent; drowsy; thoughtless; inattentive. Spenser.

I have men suffer by their absence, silence, negligence, or supine credulity. Spenser.

SUPINE, n. f. [supine, French; supinum, Latin.] In Grammar a term signifying a particular kind of verbal noun. Spenser.

SUPPLY, v. a. [from supplere.] To fill up; to furnish; to provide. Spenser.

1. With the face upward. Spenser.

2. Drowsily; thoughtlessly; indolently. Spenser.

Who on the beds of sin supinely lie,
They in the summer of their age shall die. Spenser.

The old imprison'd king,
Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd;
But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
Like Aepos's legs, they leapt upon his back. Spenser.

He panting on thy breast supinely lies,
While with thy heav'nly form he feeds his famish'd eyes. Spenser.

Beneath a verdant laurel's shade,
Horace, immortal bard, supinely laid. Spenser.

Wilt thou then repine
To labour for thyself? and rather chide
To lie supinely, hoping heaven will bless Thy flighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd? Spenser.

SUPPLENESS, n. f. [from supplere.] The quality of being supplied. Spenser.

1. Posture of lying with the face upwards. Spenser.

2. Carelessness; indolence; thoughtlessness. Spenser.

The fourth cause of error is a supinity or neglect of enquiry, even in matters wherein we doubt, rather believing than going to see. Spenser.

SUPPEDIA'NEOUS, adj. [sub and pedit, Latin.] Placed under the feet. Spenser.

He had slender legs, but encreased by riding after meals; that is, the humour descended upon their pendulosity, they having no support or suppedaneous stability. Spenser.

SUPPER, n. f. [supper, French. See SUP.] The last meal of the day; the evening repast. Spenser.

To-night we hold a solemn supper. Spenser.

For yet, ere supper-time must I perform Much business. Spenser.

Th' hour of supper comes unearn'd.
SUPPERLESS, adj. [from supper.] Wanting supper; fasting at night. Spenser.

Suppose a man's going supperless to bed, should introduce him to the table of some great prince. Spenser.

She ey'd the bard, where supperless he sat;
And pin'd. Spenser.

TO SUPPLANT, v. a. [supplanter, French; sub and plant, Latin.] To trip up the heels. Spenser.

His legs entwining
Each other, till supplanted down he fell; Spenser.

A monstrous serpent on his belly prone,
The thronging populace with hasty strides
Obtrude the easy way; the rocking town
Supplants their footsteps; and to fro they reel. Spenser.

2. To

2. To displace by stratagem; to turn out. Spenser.

It is Philoclea his heart is set upon; it is my daughter I have borne to supplant me. Spenser.

Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplant us for ingratitude. Spenser.

3. To displace; to overpower; to force away. Spenser.

If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;
Which fear, if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say, I wrong'd the duke. Spenser.

SUPPLANTER, n. f. [from supplant.] One that supplants; one that displaces. Spenser.

SUPPLE, adj. [supple, French.]

1. Pliant; flexible. Spenser.

The joints are more supple to all feats of activity in youth than afterwards. Spenser.

Will ye submit your necks, and chuse to bend
The supple knee? Spenser.

And sometimes went, and sometimes ran
With supple joints, as lively vigour led. Spenser.

No women are apter to spin linen well than the Irish, who labouring little in any kind with their hands, have their fingers more supple and soft than other women of the poorer condition in England. Spenser.

2. Yielding; soft; not obstinate. Spenser.

When we've stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have supple souls. Spenser.

Than in our prellike falls.
Even softer than thy own, of suppler kind,
More exquisite of taste, and more than man refin'd. Spenser.

If punishment reaches not the mind, and makes not the will supple, it hardens the offender. Spenser.

3. Flattering; fawning; bending. Spenser.

There is something to supple and insinuating in this absurd unnatural doctrine, as makes it extremely agreeable to a prince's ear. Spenser.

4. That which makes supple. Spenser.

Each part deriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff, and flaky, and cold appear, like death. Spenser.

TO SUPPLE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make pliant; to make soft; to make flexible. Spenser.

Poetics allaying pain, drew down the humours, and suppl'd the parts, thereby making the passages wider. Spenser.

2. To supple a carcass, drench it in water. Spenser.

2. To make compliant. Spenser.

Knaves having by their own importunate suit,
Convinc'd or suppl'd them, they cannot chuse,
But they must blab. Spenser.

A mother persisting till she had bent her daughter's mind,
And suppl'd her will, the only end of correction, the establishment of her authority thoroughly ever after. Spenser.

TO SUPPLE, v. n. [from the adjective.] To grow pliant; to grow pliant. Spenser.

Did first the rigour of their kind expel,
And suppl'd into softness as they fell. Spenser.

SUPPLEMENT, n. f. [supplementum, Fr. supplementum, Latin.] Addition to any thing by which its defects are supplied. Spenser.

Unto the word of God, being in respect of that end for which God ordained it, perfect, exact, and absolute in itself, we do not add reason as a supplement of any main or defect therein, but as a necessary instrument, without which we could not reap by the scriptures perfection that fruit and benefit which it yieldeth. Spenser.

His blood will atone for our imperfection, his righteousness be imputed in supplement to what is lacking in ours. Spenser.

SUPPLEMENTAL, adj. [from supplement.] Additional; such

SUPPLEMENTARY, n. f. [from supplement.] Additional; such as may supply the place of what is lost or wanting. Spenser.

Supplemental acts of state were made to supply defects of laws, and so tonnage and poundage were collected. Spenser.

Divinity would not then pass the yard and loom, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. Spenser.

Provide his brood next Smithfield fair,
With supplemental hobby horses,
And happy be their infant courses. Spenser.

SUPPLENESS, n. f. [suppleness, Fr. from supplere.] The quality of being supplied. Spenser.

1. Pliantness; flexibility; readiness to take any form. Spenser.

The fruit is of a pleasant taste, caused by the suppleness and gentleness of the juice, being that which maketh the boughs also to be flexible. Spenser.

2. Readiness of compliance; facility. Spenser.

Study gives strength to the mind, conversation grace; the first apt to give stiffness, the other suppleness. Spenser.

A compliance and suppleness of their wills, being by a steady hand introduced by parents, will seem natural to them, preventing all occasions of struggling. Spenser.

SUPPLETORY, n. f. [suppletorium, Latin.] That which is to fill up deficiencies. Spenser.

That suppletory of an implicit belief is by Romanists conceived sufficient for those not capable of an explicit. Spenser.

SUPPLIANT, adj. [suppliant, Fr.] Entreating; beseeching; precatory; submissive. Spenser.

To those legions your levy
Must be suppliant. Spenser.

To bow and sue for grace with suppliant knees. Spenser.

The rich grow suppliant, and the poor grow proud;
Those offer mighty gain, and these ask more. Spenser.

Constant to his first decree,
To bow the haughty neck, and raise the suppliant knee. Spenser.

SUPPLIANT, n. f. [from the adjective.] An humble petitioner; one who begs submissively. Spenser.

A petition from a Florentine I undertook,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant. Spenser.

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;
Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers. Spenser.

Hourly suitors come:
The east with incense and the west with gold,
Will stand like suppliants to receive her doom. Spenser.

Spare this life, and hear thy suppliant's prayer. Spenser.

SUPPLICANT, n. f. [from supplere.] One that entreats or implores with great submission; an humble petitioner. Spenser.

The prince and people of Nineveh assembling themselves as a main army of suppliants, God did not withstand them. Spenser.

The wife suppliant, though he prayed for the condition he thought most desirable, yet left the event to God. Spenser.

Abraham, instead of indulging the suppliant in his desire of new evidence, refers him to what his brethren had. Spenser.

TO SUPPLICATE, v. n. [supplicare, Fr. supplicare, Lat. from supplex.] To implore; to entreat; to petition submissively and humbly. Spenser.

Many things a man cannot with any comeliness say or do, a man cannot brook to supPLICATE or beg. Spenser.

Thither the kingdoms and the nations come,
In supplicating crowds to learn their doom. Spenser.

SUPPLICATION, n. f. [supplication, Fr. from supplicare.] 1. Petition humbly delivered; entreaty. Spenser.

My lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplication in the quill. Spenser.

My mother bows,
As if Olympus to a mole-hill should
In supplication nod. Spenser.

2. Petitionary worship; the adoration of a suppliant or petitioner. Spenser.

Praying with all prayer and supplication, with all perseverance and supplication for all saints. Spenser.

Bend thine ear
To supplication; hear his sighs though mute. Spenser.

These prove the common practice of the worship of images in the Roman church, as to the rites of supplication and adoration, to be as extravagant as among the heathens. Spenser.

We should testify our dependence upon God, and our confidence of his goodness by constant prayers and supplications for mercy. Spenser.

TO SUPPLY, v. a. [suppleo, Lat. supplere, French.]

1. To fill up as any deficiencies happen. Spenser.

Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys are their kearn suppl'd and maintained. Spenser.

2. To give something wanted; to yield; to afford. Spenser.

They were princes that had wives, sons, and nephews; and yet all these could not supply the comfort of friendship. Spenser.

I wanted nothing fortune could supply,
Nor did the slumber 'till that hour deny. Spenser.

3. To relieve. Spenser.

Although I neither lend nor borrow,
Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend,
I'll break a custom. Spenser.

4. To serve instead of. Spenser.

Burning ships the banish'd sun supply,
And no light shines but that by which men die. Spenser.

5. To give or bring, whether good or bad. Spenser.

Nearer care supplies
Sighs to my breast, and sorrow to my eyes. Spenser.

6. To fill any room made vacant. Spenser.

Uplift creatures to supply our vacant room.
The fun was set; and Vesper, to supply
His absent beams, had lighted up the sky. Spenser.

7. To accommodate; to furnish. Spenser.

While trees the mountain-tops with shades supply,
Your honour, name, and praise shall never die. Spenser.

The reception of light must be supplied by some open form of the fabric. Spenser.

My lover, turning away several old servants, supplied me with others from his own house. Spenser.

SUPPLY, n. f. [from the verb.] Relief of want; cure of deficiencies. Spenser.

I mean that now your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want. Spenser.</

SUP

Art from that fund each just supply provides,
Works without show, and without pomp presides.
To SUPPORT. v. a. [supporter, French; supportare, Ital.]

1. To sustain; to prop; to bear up.
Stooping to support each flow'r of tender stalk. Milton.
The palace built by Pious, vast and proud,
Supported by a hundred pillars stood. Dryden.
The original community of all things appearing from this donation of God, the sovereignty of Adam, built upon his private dominion, must fall, not having any foundation to support it.

2. To endure any thing painful without being overcome.
Strongly to suffer and support our gains. Milton.
Could'st thou support that burden?
This fierce demeanour, and his insolence, Milton.
The patience of a god could not support. Dryden.

3. To endure.
She scarce awake her eyes could keep,
Unable to support the fumes of sleep. Dryden.
None can support a diet of flesh and water without acids, as fat, vinegar, and bread, without falling into a putrid fever.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To sustain; to keep from fainting.
With inward consolations recompens'd,
And oft supported. Milton.

SUPPORT. n. f. [support, French; from the verb.]
1. Act or power of sustaining.
Though the idea we have of a horse or stone be but the collection of those several sensible qualities which we find united in them, yet, because we cannot conceive how they should subsist alone, we suppose them existing in and supported by some common subject, which support we denote by the name substance, though it be certain we have no clear idea of that support.

2. Prop; sustaining power.
3. Necessaries of life.
4. Maintenance; supply.

SUPPORTABLE. adj. [supportable, French; from support.]
Tolerable; to be endured. It may be observed that Shakespeare accents the first syllable.
As great to me, as later, and supportable.

To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker Than you may call to comfort you. Shak. Temp.
Alterations in the project of uniting Christians might be very supportable, as things in their own nature indifferent. Earl.
I wish that whatever part of misfortunes they must bear, may be rendered supportable to them. Pope.

SUPPORTABLENESS. n. f. [from supportable.] The state of being tolerable.

SUPPORTANCE. n. f. [from support.] Maintenance; support.
SUPPORTATION. n. f. port. Both these words are obsolete.
Give some supportance to the bending twigs. Shakespeare.
His quarrel he finds scarce worth talking of, therefore draw for the supportance of his vow. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
The benefited subject should render some small portion of his gain, for the supportation of the king's expence. Bacon.

SUPPORTER. n. f. [from support.]
1. One that supports.
You must walk by us upon either hand,
And good supporters are you. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
Because a relation cannot be founded in nothing, and the thing here related as a supporter, or a support, is not represented to the mind by any distinct idea. Locke.

2. Prop; that by which any thing is borne up from falling.
More might be added of helms, crests, mantles, and supporters.
The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured. Bacon.
We shall be discharged of our load; but you, that are designed for beams and supporters, shall bear. L'Estrange.
There is no loss of room at the bottom, as there is in a building set upon supporters. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Sustain; comforter.
The faints have a companion and supporter in all their miseries.
South's Sermons.

4. Maintainer; defender.
The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute in great part to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Watson.
All examples represent ingratitude as fitting in its throne, with pride at its right hand, and cruelty at its left; worthy supporters of such a reigning impiety. South.
Love was no more, when loyalty was gone, Dryden.
The great supporter of his awful throne.

SUPPOSABLE. adj. [from suppose.] That may be supposed.
Invincible ignorance is, in the far greatest number of men, ready to be confronted against the necessity of their believing all the fables of any supposable catalogue. Hammond.

SUPPOSAL. n. f. [from suppose.] Position without proof; imagination; belief.
Young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
Thinks our state to be out of frame. Shakespeare.

SUP

Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospect:
the defect of events, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous supposals. Glenn. Scip. Preface.

Interest, with a few, never proceeds but upon supposal at least of a firm and sufficient bottom. South.
Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by bold supposals and offers. Clarissa.

To SUPPOSE. v. a. [supposer, French; supponere, Latin.]
1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration without maintaining the truth of the position.
Suppose some to neglect that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all. Locke.

2. To admit without proof.
This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence. Tilghson.

3. To imagine; to believe without examination.
Tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is lending over makers. Shaksp.
Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the king's sons; for Ammon only is slain. 2 Sa. xiii. 32.
I suppose we should compel them to a quick result. Milton.

4. To require as previous to itself.
This supposes something, without evident ground. Hale.
One falsehood always supposes another, and renders all you can say suspected. Female Quixote.

SUPPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Supposition; position without proof; unevented conceit.
That we come short of our supposal so far,
That after ten years siege, yet Iroy-walls stand? Shaksp.
Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and your's,
Fit to be trusted on a bare supposal
That he is honest? Dryden's Cleopatra.

SUPPOSER. n. f. [from suppose.] One that supposes.
Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposers bleed thine eye. Shakespeare.

SUPPOSITION. n. f. [supposition, French; from suppose.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.
In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient;
yet his means are in supposition. Shakespeare.

Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye;
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die. Shaksp.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tilghson.
Such an original irrefutable notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a Deity, nor is pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITIONAL. adj. [from suppositus, suppositivus, Lat.] Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.
The destruction of Mufapha was so fatal to Solyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman is supposed to be of strange blood; for that Solyman II. was thought to be of politian. Bacon.

It is their opinion that no man ever killed his father; but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, supposititious, or begotten in adultery. Addison.
Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do. Woodward.

SUPPOSITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from suppositivus.] State of being counterfeit.
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate. Milton.
Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion; he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy. Swift.

You're formed by nature for this supremacy, which is already granted from the distinguishing character of your writing.
Dryden to Dorset.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.
From some wild curs that from their masters ran,
Abhorring the supremacy of man,
In woods and caves the rebel race began. Dryden.

SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Latin.]
1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superior is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.
As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers, in that vast
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
This strength, the feat of Deity supreme. Milton.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by flow degrees;

3. To keep in; not to let out.
Well did'st thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear we should have seen decypher'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils. Shaksp.
More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils. Shaksp.

SUPPRESS. v. a. [suppression, Fr. suppressio, Lat. from suppress.]
1. The act of suppressing.
2. Not publication.
You may depend upon a suppression of these verses. Pope.

SUPPRESSOR. n. f. [from suppress.] One that suppresses, crushes, or conceals.
To SUPPURATE. v. a. [from pus puris, Lat. suppurare, Fr.]
To generate pus or matter.
This disease is generally fatal: if it suppurates the pus, it is evacuated into the lower belly, where it produceth putrefac-tion. Arbutnot on Diet.

To SUPPURATE. v. n. To grow to pus.
SUPURATION. n. f. [suppuratio, French; from suppurate.]
The ripening or change of the matter of a tumour into pus.
If the inflammation be gone too far towards a suppuration, then it must be promoted with suppuratives, and opened by incision. Wijeman.

This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids, and consequently to suppurations. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The great physician of souls sometimes cannot cure without cutting us: sin has fettered inwardly, and he must lance the imposthume, to let out death with the suppuration. South.

SUPPURATIVE. adj. [suppurativus, French; from suppurate.]
Digressive; generating matter.
SUPPUTATION. n. f. [supputatio, French; supputo, Latin.]
Reckoning; account; calculation; computation.

From these differing properties of day and year arise difficulties in carrying on and reconciling the supputation of time in long measures. Holder on Time.

The Jews saw every day their Messiah still farther removed from them; that the promises of their doctors, about his speedy manifestations, were false; that the predictions of the prophets, whom they could now no longer understand, were covered with obscurity; that all the supputations of time either terminated in Jesus Christ, or were without a period. Wesl.

To SUPPULATE. v. a. [from supputo, Latin.] To reckon; to calculate.
SUPRA. [Latin] in composition, signifies above, or before.
SUPRALAPRARY. adj. [supra and lapsus, Latin.] Antecedent to the fall of man.

SUPRAVULGAR. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.
None of these motives can prevail with a man to furnish himself with supravulgar and noble qualities. Collier.

SUPREMACY. n. f. [from supreme.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.
No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker.

As we under heav'n are supreme head,
So, under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold. Shaksp. K. John.
I am ashamed that women
Seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shaksp.

Put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate. Milton.
Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion; he continued
to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy. Swift.

You're formed by nature for this supremacy, which is already granted from the distinguishing character of your writing.
Dryden to Dorset.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and
give his kingdom to another. Rogers.
From some wild curs that from their masters ran,
Abhorring the supremacy of man,
In woods and caves the rebel race began. Dryden.

SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Latin.]
1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superior is used often of local elevation, but supreme only
of intellectual or political.
As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither

Shoots rising up, and spreads by flow degrees;

SUR

Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.
2. Highest; most excellent.
My soul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

No single virtue we could most commend,
Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend;
For she was all in that supreme degree,
That as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.

To him both heav'n
The right had giv'n,
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command. Dryden.

SUPREME. adv. [from the adjective.] In the highest degree.
The starving chemist in his golden views
Supremely blest, the poet in his muse. Pope.

SUR. [sur, French.] In composition, means upon or over and above.
SURADDITION. n. f. [sur and addition.] Something added to the name.
He serv'd with glory and admir'd success, Shak. Cymbeline.
So gain'd the suraddition, Leonatus.

SURAL. adj. [from sura, Latin.] Being in the calf of the leg.
He was wounded in the inside of the calf of his leg, into the sural artery. Wijeman's Surgery.

SURANCE. n. f. [from sure.] Warrant; security; assurance.
Give some surance that thou art revenge;
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot-wheels. Shaksp.

To SURBATE. v. a. [surbatur, French.] To bruise and batter the feet with travel; to harass; to fatigue.
Their march they continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them; however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated. Clarendon.

Chalky land surbates and spoils oxens feet. Mortimer.
SURBATE. The participle passive of surbate.
A bear and tyger being met
In cruel fight on Lybick ocean wide,
Espy a traveller with feet surbat,
Whom they in equal prey hope to divide. Fairy Queen.

To SURCEASE. v. n. [sur and cessare, French; cessare, Latin.]
1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.
Small favours will my prayers increase;
Granting my suit, you give me all;
And then my prayers must needs surcease;
For I have made your godhead fall.

2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.
To fly altogether from God, to despair, that creatures unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under that pretence to surcease from prayers, as bootless or fruitless offices, were to him no less injurious than pernicious to our own souls. Hooker.

Nor did the British squadrons now surcease
To gall their foes o'erwhelm'd. Philips.
To SURCEASE. v. a. To stop; to put to an end. Obsolete.
All pain hath end, and every war hath peace;
But mine no price, nor prayer, may surcease. Spenser.

SURCEASE. n. f. Cessation; stop.
It might very well agree with your principles, if your discipline were fully planted, even to send out your writs of surcease unto all courts of England for the most things handled in them. Hooker.

SURCHARGE. n. f. [surcharge, French; from the verb.] Over-burthen; more than can be well born.
The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first. Bacon's Natural History.

An object of surcharge or excess destroyeth the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing. Bacon's Natural History.

The moralists make this raging of a lion to be a surcharge of one madness upon another. L'Estrange.
To SURCHARGE. v. a. [surcharger, French.] To overload;
to overburthen.

They put upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romecot, the which might not surcharge
the tenant or freeholder. Spenser on Ireland.
Tamas was returned to Tauris, in hope to have suddenly surprised his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city. Kneller's History of the Turks.

More remov'd,
Left heav'n surcharg'd with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new broils. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears
Without the vent of words. Milton's Paradise Lost.

No sooner did they espy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping: this surmise was occasioned, for that the English ships removed the day before. Hayward.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,
False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises. Pope.
No man ought to be charged with principles he actually disowns, unless his practices contradict his profession; not upon small surmises. Swift.

TO SURMOUNT. v. a. [surmonter, French.]

1. To rise above.
The mountains of Olympus, Athos, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.

2. To conquer; to overcome.
Though no resistance was made, the English had much ado to surmount the natural difficulties of the place the greatest part of one day. Hayward.

He hardly escaped to the Persian court; from whence, if the love of his country had not surmounted its base ingratitude to him, he had many invitations to return at the head of the Persian fleet; but he rather chose a voluntary death. Swift.

3. To surpass; to exceed.
What surmounts the reach
Of human sense, I shall delineate so,
By lik'ning spiritual to corporeal forms,
As may express them best. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SURMOUNTABLE. adj. [surmount, French.] Conquerable; surpassable.

SURMULLET. n. f. [mugil, Lat.] A sort of fish. Ainsworth.

SURNAME. n. f. [surnom, French.]

above the Christian name.
Many which were mere English joined with the Irish against the king, taking on them Irish habits and customs, which could never since be clean wiped away; of which sort be most of the surnames that end in an, as Hernan, Shinan, and Mun-gan, which now account themselves natural Irish. Spenser.

He, made heir not only of his brother's kingdom, but of his virtues and haughty thoughts, and of the surname also of Barbarossa, began to aspire unto the empire of all that part of Africa. Kocher's History of the Turks.

The epithets of great men, monsieur Boileau is of opinion, were in the nature of surnames, and repeated as such. Pope.

2. An appellation added to the original name.

Witness may
My surname Coriolanus: the painful service,
The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are required
But with that surname. Shak. Coriolanus.

TO SURNAME. v. a. [surnommer, Fr. from the noun.] To name by an appellation added to the original name.

The people of Rome have by common voice,
In election for the Roman empire,
Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius. Shak. Titus Andronicus.
Another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel. Is. xlv. 5.

named* it evil, and thereby baffled the command. South.

TO SURPASS. v. a. [surpasser, French.] To excel; to exceed;
to go beyond in excellence.

The climate's delicate,
Fertile the soil, the temple much surpassing
The common praise it bears. Shak. Winter's Tale.

O, by what name, for thou above all these,
Above mankind, or ought than mankind higher,
*Surpass*est far my naming! how may I Adore thee, author of this universe? Milton.

Achilles, Homer's hero, in strength and courage surpassed
the rest of the Grecian army. Dryden.

A nymph of late there was,
Whose heav'nly form her fellows did surpass,
The pride and joy of fair Arcadia's plains. Dryden.

Under or near the Line are mountains, which, for bigness and number, surpass those of colder countries, as much as the heat there surpasses that of those countries. Woodward.

SURPASSING. participial adj. [surpass, French.] Excellent in an high degree.

O thou! that with surpassing glory crown'd,
Look it from thy sole dominion like the god
Of this new world. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His miracles proved him to be sent from God, not more by that infinite power that was seen in them, than by that surpassing goodness they demonstrated to the world. Calamy.

SURPRISE. n. f. [surprise, French, Fr. surpellecium, Lat.] The white garb which the clergy wear in their acts of ministration.

SURRENDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of yielding.
Our general mother, with eyes
Of conjugal attraction unprov'd,
And meek surrender, half-embracing lean'd
On our first father.

Having muller'd up all the forces he could, the clouds above and the deeps below, he prepares for a surrender; asserting, from a mistaken computation, that all these will not come up to near the quantity requisite. Woodward.

Juba's surrender
Would give up Africa unto Caesar's hands. Addison.

2. The act of resigning or giving up to another.
If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us. Shakespeare.

That hope quickly vanishes upon the undoubted intelligence of that surrender. Clarendon.

As oppress'd states made themselves homagers to the Romans to engage their protection, so we should have made an entire surrender of ourselves to God, that we might have gain'd a title to his deliverances. Deacy of Piety.

In passing a thing away by deed of gift, are required a surrender on the giver's part, of all the property he has in it; and to the making of a thing sacred, this surrender by its right owner is necessary. South's Sermons.

SURREPTIOUS. n. f. [surreptus, Latin.] Surprise; sudden and unperceived invasion.

Sins compatible with a regenerate estate, are sins of a sudden surreption. Hammond.

feed upon herbs and some fort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. Towards the breast, of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous. Calm.

With untainted eyes
Compare her face with some that I shall flow,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow. Shakspeare.
Let music follow him, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan like end. Shakspeare.

I have been a swan,
With bootless labour, swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves. Shakspeare.
The birds easy to be drawn are plainpieds, or water-fowl,
as the mallard, goose, and swan. Peascham on Drawing.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring fond refusal, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans returning to the floods. Dryden.

The idea, which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise. Lack.
SWANSKIN. n. f. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft lank imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

SWARM. n. f. [swearm, Saxon; swarms, Dutch.]
1. A great body or number of bees or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.
A swarm of bees that cut the liquid rick
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden's Æn.
2. A multitude; a crowd.
From this swarm of fair adventures,
You griv'd the general sway into your hands,
For your oath to us to Doncaster. Shakspeare.
If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found. Addison on Italy.
To SWARM. v. n. [swearm, Saxon; swarven, Dutch.]
1. To rife as bees in a body, and quit the hive.
All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long Summer's day;
Some found the trumpet for the left to swarm. Dryden.
Swarm'd on a rotten tick the bees I spy'd.
When bees hang in swarming time, they will prefer to fly,
if the weather hold. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.
The merciless Macdonell,
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
O ye superfluous laciness, and our peasants,
Whom in unnecessary fashion swarm
About our figures of battle. Shakspeare. Henry V.

What a multitude of thoughts at once
Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears.
Then mounts the thrones, high plac'd before the shrine;
In crowds around the swarming people join. Dryden's Æn.
3. To be crowded; to be over-run; to be thronged.
These garfions you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers. Spenser.
Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl, her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals. Hovel.

nily.
SWARTHINESS. n. f. [from swartly.] Darkness of complexion;
tawinness.
SWARTHLY. adj. [See SWART.] Dark of complexion; black;
dusky; tawny.
Set me where, on some pathless plains, Roscommon.
The swartly Africans complain.
Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or swartly, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Here swartly Charles appears, and there Addison.
His brother with dejected air.
Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;
Their swartly hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death great o'rm. Addison's Cato.
SWASH. n. f. [A cant word.] A figure, whose circumference is not round, but oval; and whose moldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work. Moxon.
To SWASH. v. n. To make a great clatter or noise: whence swashbuckler.
We'll have a swashing and a martial outdieu,
As many other manly cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances. Shakspeare.
Draw, if you be men: Gregory, remember thy swashing.
Shak. Romeo and Juliet. blow.
SWASHER. n. f. [from swash.] One who makes a show of valour or force of arms.
I have observed these three swashers; three such antics do not amount to a man. Shakspeare. Henry V.
SWATCH. n. f. A swatch. Not in use.
One spreadeth those bands fo in order to lie,
As barle in swatches may fill it thereby. Tupper.
SWATH. n. f. [swade, Dutch.]
1. A line of grafs cut down by the mower.
With toffing and raking, and setting on cox,
Grasse, lately in swatches, is meat for an ox. Tupper.
The strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath. Shakspeare.
As soon as your grafs is mown, if it be thick in the swath, neither air nor sun can pass freely through it. Morimer.
2. A continued quantity.
A swath'd swath, that cons flate without book, and utters it by great swaths. Shak. Twelfth Night.
3. [Specan, to bind, Saxon.] A band; a fillet.
An Indian comb, a rick whereof is cut into three sharp and round teeth four inches long: the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine fravvs laid along the sides, and lapped round about it in several distinct swaths. Grew.
They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, which they folded about me, 'till they had wrapped me in above an hundred yards of swathe. Addison's Spectator.
To SWATHE. v. a. [Specan, Saxon.] To bind, as a child with bands and rollers.
Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathing cloaths,
This infant warrior, and his enterprizes, Discomfited Great Douglas. Shak. Henry IV.
He had two sons; the eldest of them at three years old,
I' th' swathing cloaths the other, from their nursery
Were stol'n. Shakspeare. Cymbeline.
Their children are never swathed, or bound about with any thing, when they are first born; but are put naked into the bed with their parents to lie. Abbot's Description of the World.
Swath'd in her lap the bold nurse bore him out,
With olive branches cover'd round about. Dryden.
Master's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,
Or throws his loco-motive tricks. Prior.
To SWAX. v. a. [schweben, German, to move.]
1. To swim in the hand; to move or weld with facility; as, to sway the center.
Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil life,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Fasquet.

2. To bias; to direct to either side.
Heav'n forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me. Shakespeare.
I took your hands; but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar. Shakespeare.
The only way to improve our own,
By dealing faithfully with none;
As bowls run true by being made.
On purpose false, and to be sway'd. Hadriar.
3. To govern; to rule; to overpower; to influence.
The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakespeare.
The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says, you are the worthier maid. Shakespeare.
On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
The world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream, Sabrina is her name. Milton.
Take heed lest passion sway
Thy judgment to do ought, which else free will Would not admit. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The judgment is sway'd by passion, and stored with lubricious opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths. Glau.
This was the race
To sway the world, and land and sea subdue. Dryden.
With these I went,
Nor idle stood with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd; yet those I sway'd
With powerful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd. Dryden.
When examining these matters, let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a more durable interest. Tillotson.
- TO SWAY. v. n.
1. To hang heavy; to be drawn by weight.
In these personal respects, the balance sways on our part. Bacon.
2. To have weight; to have influence.
The example of sundry churches, for approbation of one things, doth sway much; but yet still as having the force of an example only, and not of a law. Hooker.
3. To bear rule; to govern.
The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never lag with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shakespeare.
Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakespeare.
Aged tyranny sways not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Were thou that monarch reign;
There didst not: there let him still victor sway. Milton.
- SWAY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The swing or sweep of a weapon.
To strike with huge two-handed sway. Milton.
2. Any thing moving with bulk and power.
Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth Shakes like a thing unfirm? Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar.
Expert
When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway
Of battle. Milton.
3. Power; rule; dominion.
This sort had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory, with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat.
In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none, saving that some fell sooner, and some later, from the foundnels of belief. Hooker.
Only retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of th' helm,
Beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Her father counts it dangerous
That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
And in his wisdom halts our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.
Too truly Tamerlane's successors they;
Each thinks a world too little for his sway. Dryden. Aurengz.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison's Cato.
4. Influence; direction.
An evil mind in authority doth not only follow the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires, not before thought of.
They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.
- TO SWEAR. v. n. preter. swore or swore; part. pass. sworn.
[swaran, Gothic; swepan, Saxon; sweren, Dutch.]
1. To obtest some superiour power; to utter an oath.
If a man, now a vow unto the Lord, or sworn an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Nam.
Thee, thee an hundred languages shall claim,
And savage Indians swear by Anna's name. Tietel.

2. To declare or promise upon oath.
We shall have old swearing
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too. Shakespeare.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear.
Never to part with it; and here he stands,
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakespeare.
I would have kept my word;
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Jacob said, swear to me; and he swore unto him. Gen.
Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Poliorcetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he swore he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Peacocks.
3. To give evidence upon oath.
At what case
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
4. To obtest the great name profanely.
Because of swearing the land mourneth. Jer. xxiii. 10.
Obey thy parents, keep thy word justly;
swear not. Shakespeare. King Lear.
None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions. Will.
- TO SWEAR. v. a.
1. To put to an oath.
Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel. Ex. xiii. 19.
Sworn ashore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck,
I'll be sworn. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Let me swear you all to secrecy;
And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryden.
2. To declare upon oath.
Now by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
—O vassal! miscreant! Shakespeare.
3. To obtest by an oath.
SWEARER. n. f. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.
And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?
—Every one.
—Who must hang them?
—Why, the honest men.
—Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang them up. Shakespeare.
Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain:
It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse:
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;
But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
Lets his foul run for nought. Herbert.
Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer; for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Brown.
It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift's Polite Conversation.
- SWEAT. n. f. [preter. Saxon; swet, Dutch.]
1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.
Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excreted.
Some insensible effluvia, exhaling out of the pores, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals. Bogel.
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. Milton.
When Lucilius brandishes his pen,
And flashes in the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part,
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart. Dryden.
Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arb.
2. Labour; toil; drudgery.
This painful labour of abridging was not easy, but a mit-ter of sweats and watching. Adams ii. 26.
The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd. Milton.
What from Johnson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more easy nature did bestow
On Shakespeare's gentler mule, in these full grown Their graces both appear. Danham.
3. Evaporation of moisture.
Beams give in the mow, and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed 'till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow. Martimer's Husbandry.
- TO SWEAT. v. n. preterite swet, swetted; particip. pass. swetted.
[from the noun.]
1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.
Shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs?
Why sweat they under burdens? Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

ness. Bacon's Henry VII.
- A young tall squire
Did from the camp at first before him go;
At first he did, but scarce could follow trait;
Sweating beneath a shield's unruly weight. Cowley.
2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.
How the drudging goblin swet
To earn his cream-bowl duly fet;
When in one night, ere glimpe of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thrush'd the corn. Milton.
Our author, not content to ice
That others write as carelessly as he;
Though he pretends not to make things complete;
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat. Waller.
3. To emit moisture.
Waincoats will sweat so that they will run with water.
In cold evenings there will be a moisture or sweating upon the roof. Martimer.
- TO SWEAT. v. a. To emit as sweat.
Grease that's sweated
From the butcher's gibbet, throw
Into the flame. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
For him the rich Arabia sweats her gum. Dryden.
- SWEATER. n. f. [from sweat.] One who sweats.
SWEATY. adj. [from sweat.]
1. Covered with sweat; moist with sweat.
The rabblement hooted and clapp'd their chop'd hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar.
A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milton.
2. Consisting of sweat.
And then, so nice, and so genteel,
Such cleanliness from head to heel;
No humours gross, or frowy steams,
No noisome whiffs, or sweaty steams. Swift.
3. Laborious; toilsome.
Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.
- TO SWEAT. v. a. [Japan, Saxon.]
1. To drive away with a besom.
2. To clean with a besom.
What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one, doth not sweep the house, and seek diligently 'till she find it?
Lu. xv. 8.
3. To carry with pomp.
Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shakespeare. H. VI.
4. To drive or carry off with celerity and violence.
Though I could,
With barefaced power, sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it, yet I must not. Shakespeare.
The river of Kishon swept them away. Psal. ci. v.
The blustering winds striving for victory, sweep the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down unto the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive. Knut's History of the Turks.
- Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.
My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince. Dryden.
I have already swept the flakes, and with the common good fortune of prosperous gamblers can be content to sit. Dryden.
Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish? Dryden.
Foot! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows
To sweep some, pow'r, and wealth away;
The past is all by death possess'd,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving, bids them live, to day.
A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm
swept a great deal of it into his hat. Swift.
5. To pass over with celerity and force.
6. To rub over.
Their long descending train
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires sweep the plain. Dryden.

7. To strike with long stroke.
Descend ye nine; descend and sing;
The breathing instruments inspire,
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the founding lyre. Pope.
- TO SWEEP. v. n.
1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftness.
Haste me to know it; that I with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love
May sweep to my revenge. Shakespeare.
A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food. Prov. xxviii. iii.
Before tempestuous winds arise,
Stars shooting through the darkness gild the night
With sweeping glories and long trails of light. Dryden.
2. To pass with pomp; to pass with an equal motion.
She sweeps, it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife. Shakespeare.
In gentle dreams I often will be by,
And sweep along before your closing eye. Dryden.
3. To move with a long reach.
Nor always errs; for oft the gauntlet draws
A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws. Dryden.
- SWEEP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of sweeping.
2. The compass of any violent or continued motion.
A door drags when by its ill hanging on its hinges, or by the ill boarding of the room the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Milton's Mechan. Exercise.
Lion-hearted Richard like a torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves Within its sweep, trees, houses, men. Philips.
3. Violent destruction.
In countries subject to great epidemical sweeps, men may live very long, but where the proportion of the chronical distemper is great, it is not likely to be so. Grant.
4. Direction of any motion not rectilinear.
Having made one incision a little circularly, begin a second, bringing it with an opposite sweep to meet the other. Sharp.
- SWEPT. n. f. [from sweep.] That which is swept away.
Should this one broomstick enter the scene, covered with dust, through the sweepings of the finest lady's chamber, we should despise its vanity. Swift.
- SWEPT. n. f. [from sweep and net.] A net that takes in a great compass.
She was a sweepnet for the Spanish ships, which happily fell into her net. Camden.
- SWEPTAKE. n. f. [from sweep and stake.] A man that wins all.
Is't writ in your revenge,
That sweepstake you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser. Shakespeare.
- SWEPT. adj. [from sweep.] Passing with great speed and violence over a great compass at once.
They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy way. Dryden.
- SWEET. adj. [preter. Sax. soet, Dutch.]
1. Pleasing to any sense.
Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense:
fugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as mulick;
nor hath mulick the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all: nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath; yet the royal Psalmist faith of a man, we took sweet counsel together;
and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet. Watts.
2. Luscious to the taste.
This honey tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.
3. Fragrant to the smell.
Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet. Shakespeare.
Where a rainbow hangeth over or toucheth, there breatheth a sweet smell; for that this happeneth but in certain matters which have some sweetness which the dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.
Shred very small with thime sweet-margory and a little winter favoury. Walton's Angler.
The balmy zephyrs, silent since her death,
Lament the ceasing of a sweeter breath. Pope.
The streets with treble voices ring,
To sell the bounteous product of the spring;
Sweet-smelling flow'rs, and elders early bud.
4. Melodious to the ear.
The dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.
Her speech is grac'd with sweeter found
Than in another's song is found. Waller.
No more the streams their murmurs shall forbear
A sweeter music than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and mulick is no more. Pope.
5. Pleasing

5. Pleasing to the eye.
Heav'n blest thee!
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on. Shakespeare.
6. Not salt.
The white of an egg, or blood mingled with salt water, gathers the saltiness and maketh the water sweeter; this may be by adhesion. Bacon's Natural History.
- The falls drop with rain,
Sweet waters mingle with the briny main. Dryden.
7. Not four.
Time changeth fruits from more four to more sweet; but contrariwise liquors, even those that are of the juice of fruit, from more sweet to more four. Bacon's Natural History.
- Trees whose fruit is acid last longer than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon.
- When metals are dissolved in acid menstrua, and the acids in conjunction with the metal act after a different manner, so that the compound has a different taste, much milder than before, and sometimes a sweet one; is it not because the acids adhere to the metallic particles, and thereby lose much of their activity. Newton's Opticks.
8. Mild; soft; gentle.
Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness. Shakespeare.
The Pelicades shedding sweet influence.
Mercy has, could mercy's self be seen,
No sweeter look than this propitious queen. Waller.
9. Grateful; pleasing.
Sweet interchange of hill and valley. Milton.
Euryalus,
Than whom the Trojan host
No fairer face or sweeter air could boast. Dryden's Æneid.
10. Not stale; not stinking: as, that meat is sweet.
SWEET. n. f.
1. Sweetness; something pleasing.
Pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
What softer sounds are these salute the ear,
From the large circle of the hemisphere,
As if the center of all sweets met here! Ben. Jonson.
- Hail! wedded love,
Perpetual fountain of domestic sweets! Milton.
Taught to live
The easiest way; nor with perplexing thoughts
To interrupt the sweet of life. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Now since the Latian and the Trojan brood
Have tasted vengeance, and the sweets of blood, Speak. Dryden's Æneid.
- Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryden.
We have to great an abhorrence of pain, that a little of it extinguishes all our pleasures; a little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.
- Love had ordain'd that it was Abra's turn To mix the sweets, and minister the urn. Prior.
2. A word of endearment.
Sweet! leave me here a while
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakespeare.
Wherefore frowns my sweet? Ben. Jonson.
Have I too long been absent from these lips?
3. A perfume.
As in perfumes,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musick or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all:
So the was all a sweet. Dryden.
- Flowers
Innumerable, by the soft south-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.
- SWEETBREAD*. n. f. The pancreas of the calf.
Never tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digestion, as veal, pullets, or sweetbreads. Harvey on Consumption.
Sweetbread and collops were with skewers prick'd
About the sides; imbibing what they deck'd. Dryden.
When you roast a breast of veal, remember your sweet- heart the butler loves a sweetbread. Swift.
- SWEETBRIAR*. n. f. [sweet and briar.] A fragrant shrub.
For March come violets and peach-tree in blossom, the cornelian-tree in blossom, and sweetbriar. Bacon.
- SWEETBROOM*. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
- SWEETCICELY*. n. f. [Myrrhus.] A plant.
The characters are; it is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of several unequal petals or flower-leaves that are placed circularly, and rest upon the em-palement, which turns to a fruit, composed of two seeds resembling a bird's bill, channelled and gibbous on one side, but plain on the other. Miller.

- To SWEETEN. v. a. [from sweet.]
1. To make sweet.
The world the garden is; she is the flow'r
That sweetens all the place; she is the guest Of rarest price. Edith.
Here is the smell of the blood still: all the perfume of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Shakespeare.
Give me an ounce of civet to sweeten my imagination. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- With fairest flow'r's Fiddle,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Be humbly minded, know your post;
Sweeten your tea, and watch your toast. Swift.
2. To make mild or kind.
All kindnesse descend upon such a temper, as rivers of fresh waters falling into the main sea; the sea swallows them all, but is not changed or sweetened by them. South's Sermon.
3. To make less painful.
She the sweetness of my heart, even sweetens the death which her sweetness brought upon me. Shakespeare.
Thou shalt secure her helpless sex from harms,
And the thy eyes will sweeten with her charms. Dryden.
Interest of state and change of circumstances may have sweetened these reflections to the politer sort, but impressions are not so easily worn out of the minds of the vulgar. Addison.
- Thy mercy *sweeten*ed ev'ry foil,
Made ev'ry region please;
The hoary Alpin hills it warm'd,
And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas. Addison's Spectator.
4. To palliate; to reconcile.
These lessons may be gilt and sweetened as we order pills and potions, so as to take off the disgust of the remedy. L'Estr.
5. To make grateful or pleasing.
I would have my love
Angry sometimes, to sweeten off the rest
Of her behaviour. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.
6. To soften; to make delicate.
Corregio has made his memory immortal, by the strength he has given to his figures, and by sweetening his lights and shadows, and melting them into each other so happily, that they are even imperceptible. Dryden's Discourse.
- To SWEETEN. v. n. To grow sweet.
Where a wasp hath bitten in a grape, or any fruit, it will sweeten hastily. Bacon's Natural History.
- SWEETENER*. n. f. [from sweeten.]
1. One that palliates; one that represents things tenderly.
But you who, till your fortune's made,
Must be a sweetener by your trade,
Must sweat he never meant us ill. Swift.
Those softness, sweeteners, and compounders, shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.
2. That which counterpoises acrimony.
Powder of crabs eyes and claws, and burnt egg-shells are prescribed as sweeteners of any sharp humours. Temple.
- SWEETHEART*. n. f. [sweet and heart.] A lover or mistress.
Mistress retire yourself
Into some covert; take your sweetheart
And pluck o'er your brows. Shakespeare.
Sweetheart, you are now in an excellent good temperality, and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose. Shakespeare.
One thing, Sweetheart, I will ask,
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.
A wench was wringing her hands and crying;
ly parted with her sweetheart. Clarendon.
Pry'thee, sweetheart, how go matters in the house where thou hast been? L'Estrange.
- She interprets all your dreams for thee,
Foretells th' estate, when the rich uncle dies,
And fees a sweetheart in the sacrifice. Dryden's Juvenal.
- SWEETING*. n. f. [from sweet.]
1. A sweet luscious apple.
A child will chuse a sweeting because it is presently fair and pleasant, and refuse a runnet, because it is then green, hard and sour. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
2. A word of endearment.
Trip no further, pretty sweeting;
Journeys end in lovers meeting. Shakespeare.
- SWEETISH*. adj. [from sweet.] Somewhat sweet.

quickly returned. Sidney.
- Why all the charges of the nuptial feast,
Wine and delerts, and sweetmeats to digest. Dryden.
There was plenty, but the dishes were ill sorted; whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women, but little solid meat for men. Dryden.
- Make your transparent sweetmeats truly nice,
With Indian sugar and Arabian spice. King's Cookery.
If a child cries for any unwholesome fruit, you purchase his quiet by giving him a less hurtful sweetmeat: this may preserve his health, but pollutes his mind. Locke.
- At a lord mayor's feast, the sweetmeats do not make their appearance till people are cloyed with beef and mutton. Addison.
- They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to bring any presents of toys or sweetmeats. Gulliver's Travels.
- SWEETNESS*. n. f. [from sweet.] The quality of being sweet in any of its senses; fragrance; melody; lucidness; deli-ciousness; agreeableness; delightfulness; gentleness of manners; mildness of aspect.
She the sweetness of my heart, even sweetening the death which her sweetness brought upon me. Sidney.
The right form, the true figure, the natural colour that is fit and due to the dignity of a man, to the beauty of a woman, to the sweetness of a young babe. Ascham.
O our lives sweetness!
- That we the pain of death would hourly bear,
Rather than die at once. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Where a rainbow toucheth, there breatheth forth a sweet smell: for this happeneth but in certain matters, which have in themselves some sweetness, which the gentle dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.
- Serene and clear harmonious Horace flows,
With sweetness not to be exprest in prose. Recommen.
Suppose two authors equally sweet, there is a great diffin-ition to be made in sweetness; as in that of sugar and that of honey. Dryden.
- This old man's talk, though honey flow'd
In every word, would now lose all its sweetness. Addison.
Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly flow;
And praise the easy vigor of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.
A man of good education, excellent understanding, and exact taste; these qualities are adorned with great modesty and a most amiable sweetness of temper. Swift.
- SWEETWILLIAM*. n. f. Plants. They are a species of gilliflower. [See CLOVE GILLIFLOWERS.]
- SWEETWILLOW*. n. f. Gale or Dutch myrtle.
The leaves are placed alternately on the branches: it hath male flowers which are produced at the wings of the leaves; are naked, and grow in a longish spike: the fruit, which is produced in separate trees, is of a conical figure, and qua-mole, containing one seed in each scale. Miller.
- To SWEELL. v. n. Participle pass. swollen. [Jpellan, Sax. swellen, Dutch.]
1. To grow bigger; to grow turgid; to extend the parts.
Propitious Tyber smooth'd his wat'ry way,
He roll'd his river back, and pois'd he flood,
A gentle swelling and a peaceful food. Dryden's Æneid.
2. To tumify by inflammation.
But strangely visited people,
All swollen and ulc'rous; pitiful to the eye,
The meer despair of surgery he cures. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so that their cloaths waxed not old, and their feet swollen not.
Nehem. ix. 21.
- Swollen* is his breast; his inward pains encrease,
All means are us'd, and all without success. Dryden.
3. To be exasperated.
My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs. Shakespeare.
4. To look big.
Here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock. Shakespeare.
Pelus and Telephus exil'd and poor,

The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene. Shakespeare.
9. It implies commonly a notion of something wrong.
Your youth admires
The throws and swellings of a Roman soul,
Cato's bold flights, th' extravagance of virtue. Addison.
Immoderate valour swells into a fault. Addison's Cato.
- To SWELL. v. a.
1. To cause to rise or encrease; to make tumid.
Wind, blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main. Shakespeare.
You who supply the ground with seeds of grain,
And you who swell those seeds with kindly rain. Dryden.
2. To aggravate; to heighten.
It is low ebb with his accuser, when such peccadillos are put to swell the charge. Atterbury.
3. To raise to arrogance.
All these miseries proceed from the same natural causes, which have usually attended kingdoms swollen with long plenty,
pride, and excess. Clarendon.
- SWELL*. n. f. [from the verb.] Extension of bulk.
The swan's down-feather
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
And neither way inclines. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.
The king of men, swollen with pride,
Refus'd his presents, and his prayers deny'd. Dryden.
- SWELLING*. n. f. [from swell.]
1. Morbid tumour.
2. Protuberance; prominence.
The superficies of such plates are not even, but have many cavities and swellings, which how shallow soever do a little vary the thickness of the plate. Newton's Opticks.
3. Effort for a vent.
My heart was torn in pieces to see the husband suppreffing and keeping down the swellings of his grief. Tatler.
- To SWELL. v. n. To puff in sweat, if that be the meaning.
Chearful blood in faintness chill did melt,
Which like a fever fit through all his body swelt. Fa. Queen.
- To SWELLER. v. n. [This is supposed to be corrupted from swelly.]
1. To be pained with heat.
If the sun's excessive heat
Makes our bodies sweller,
To an other hedge we get
For a friendly shelter;
There we may Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath. Walton's Angler.
- To SWELLER. v. a. To parch; or dry up with heat.
Some would always have long nights and short days; others again long days and short nights; one climate would be scorched and sweller with everlasting dog-days, while an eternal December blasted another. Bentley's Sermon.
- SWELTRY*. adj. [from swelter.] Suffocating with heat.
SWELT. The participle and preterite of swelp.
To SWELD. v. n. To breed a green turf. [See to SWARD.]
The clays that are long in swelding, and little subject to weeds, are the best land for clover. Mortimer.
- To SWERVE. v. n. [swerven, Saxon and Dutch.]
1. To wander; to rove.
A maid thitherward did run,
To catch her sparrow which from her did swerve. Sidney.
The swerving vines on the tall elms prevail,
Unhurt by southern show'rs or northern hail. Dryden.
2. To deviate; to depart from rule, custom or duty.
That which angels do clearly behold, and without any swerving observe, is a law celestial and heavenly. Hooker.
Howsoever these swervings are now and then incident into the course of nature, nevertheless so constantly the laws of nature are by natural agents observed, that no man denieth;
but those things which nature worketh are wrought either always, or for the most part after one and the same manner.
Hooker.
- The ungodly have laid a snare for me; but yet I swerve not from thy commandments. Common Prayer.
Were I crown'd the most imperial monarch,
Thereto most worthy, were I the fairest youth
That ever made the eye swerve,
I would not prize them without her love.
There is a protection very just which princes owe to their servants, when, in obedience to their just commands, upon extraordinary occasions, in the execution of their trusts, they swerve from the strict letter of the law. Clarendon.
Till then his majesty had not in the least swerved from that act of parliament. Clarendon.
Annihilation in the course of nature, defect and swerving in the creature without the sin of man would immediately follow. Haleswill on Providence.

S W I

- Firm we subside, yet possible to swerve. Milton.
Many who, through the contagion of ill example, swerve exceedingly from the rules of their holy faith, yet would upon such an extraordinary warning be brought to comply with them. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. To ply; to bend.
Now their mightiest quell'd, the battle swerv'd. Milton.
With many an inroad gor'd.
4. [I know not whence derived.] To climb on a narrow body.
Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear,
Upon the topmost branch, the tree was high,
Yet nimbly up from bough to bough I swerv'd. Dryden.
She fled, returning by the way she went,
And swerv'd along her bow with swift ascent. Dryden.
SWIFT. adj. [from swif, Saxon.]
1. Moving far in a short time; quick; fleet; speedy; nimble; rapid.
Thou art so far before,
That swift wing of recompence is slow
To overtake thee. Shakespeare.
Yet are these feet, whose strengthless Ray is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay. Shakespeare.
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave.
Men of war, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and as swift as the roes upon the mountains. Coran, xii. 8.
We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of other muscles. Bacon.
To him with swift ascent he up return'd.
Things that move to swift as not to affect the senses distinclly, with several distinguishable distances of their motion, and to cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.
It preserves the ends of the bones from incalcescence, which they, being solid bodies, would contract from any swift motion. Ray.
Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift fin'd racers of the flood. Dryden.
Clouded in a deep abyss of light,
While present, too severe for human sight,
Nor staying longer than one swift-wing'd night. Prior.
Mantiger made a circle round the chamber, and the swift- footed martin pursued him. Arbutnot.
There too my son,—ah once my best delight,
Once swift of foot, and terrible in fight. Pope's Odyssey.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.
2. Ready.
Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak. Ja, i. 19.
He made intricate seem straight,
To mischievous swift. Milton.
SWIFT. n. f. [from the quickness of their flight.]
1. A bird like a swallow; a martin.
Swifts and swallows have remarkably short legs, and their toes grasp any thing very strongly. Derham.
2. The current of a stream.
He can live in the strongest swift of the water. Walton.
SWIFTLY. adv. [from swift.] Fleetly; rapidly; nimbly; with celerity; with velocity.
These move swiftly, and at great distance; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmigration is easily stopped. Bacon's Natural History.
Pleas'd with the passage, we slide swiftly on,
And see the dangers which we cannot shun. Dryden.
In decent order they advance to light;
Yet then too swiftly fleet by human sight,
And meditate too soon their everlasting flight. Prior.
SWIFTHNESS. n. f. [from swift.] Speed; nimbleness; rapidity;
quickness; velocity; celerity.
Let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all thing thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakespeare's Henry V.
We may outrun
By violent swiftness that which we run at;
And lose by over running. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Speed to describe whole swiftness number fails. Milton.
Exulting, till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.
Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.
To SWIG. v. n. [from swiga, Hindick.] To drink by large draughts.
To SWILL. v. a. [from swill, Saxon.]
1. To drink luxuriously and grossly.
The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
In your embow'd bowels. Shakespeare's Richard III.

S W I

- The most common of these causes are an hereditary disposition, swilling down great quantities of cold watery liquors.
Arbutnot on Diet.
- Such is the poet, fresh in pay,
The third night's profits of his play;
His morning draughts till noon can swill,
Among his brethren of the quill. Swift.
2. To wash; to drench.
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakespeare.
With that a German oft has swill'd his throat,
Deluded, that imperial Rhine bestow'd
The generous summer. Philips.
3. To inebriate.
I should be loth
To meet the rudeness and swill'd insolence
Of such late waiters. Milton.
He drinks a swilling draught; and lin'd within,
Will fuddle in the bath his outward skin. Dryden.
SWILL. n. f. [from the verb.] Drink, luxuriously poured down.
Give swine such swill as you have. Mortimer.
Thus as they swim, in mutual swill the talk Reels fast from them to theme. Thomson.
- SWILLER. n. f. [from swill.] A luxurious drinker.
To SWIM. v. n. Preterite swam, swum, or swum. [from swimman, Saxon; swemmen, Dutch.]
1. To float on the water; not to sink.
I will scarce think you have swum in a gondola. Shakespeare.
We have ships and boats for going under water, and brook-ing of seas; also swimming-girdles and supporters. Bacon.
2. To move progressively in the water by the motion of the limbs.
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
The soldiers counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out and escape. At, xxvii. 42.
The rest driven into the lake, where seeking to save their lives by swimming, they were slain in coming to land by the Spanish horsemen, or else in their swimming shot by the har-quebusers. Kneller.
Animals swim in the same manner as they go, and need no other way of motion for natation in the water, than for progression upon the land. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The frightened wolf now swims among the sheep,
The yellow lion wanders in the deep.
I he flag swims faster than he ran before.
Blue Triton gave the signal from the shore,
The ready Nereids heard and swam before,
To smooth the seas. Dryden.
3. To be conveyed by the stream.
With tenders of our protection of them from the fury of those who would soon drown them, if they refused to swim down the popular stream with them. King Charles.
I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant.
Dryden.
4. To glide along with a smooth or dizzy motion.
She with pretty and with swimming gate
Follying, her womb then rich with my young squire
Would imitate. Shakespeare.
A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden.
My slack hand dropt, and all the idle pomp,
Priests, altars, victims swam before my sight.
The fainting soul flood ready wing'd for flight,
And o'er his eye-balls swam the shades of night. Pope.
5. To be dizzy; to be vertiginous.
I am taken with a grievous swimming in my head, and such a mist before my eyes, that I can neither hear nor see. Dryden.
6. To be floated.
When the heavens are filled with clouds, when the earth swims in rain, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes into the visionary worlds of art. Addison's Spectator.
Sudden the ditches swell, the meadows swim. Thomson.
7. To have abundance of any quality; to flow in any thing.
They now swim in joy.
Ere long to swim at large, and laugh; for which
The world a world of tears must weep. Milton.
To SWIM. v. a. To pass by swimming.
Sometimes he thought to swim the stormy main,
By stretch of arms the distant shore to gain. Dryden.
SWIMM. n. f. [from the verb.] The bladder of fishes by which they are supported in the water.
The braces have the nature and use of tendons, in contracting the swim, and thereby transuding the air out of one bladder into another, or discharging it from them both. Gre-der into another, or discharging it from them both. Swimmer.

S W I

- SWIMMER. n. f. [from swim.]
1. One who swims.
Birds find ease in the depth of the air, as swimmers do in a deep water. Bacon.
Latrotrous and flat billed birds, being generally swimmers,
the organ is wisely contrived for action.
Life is oft preserv'd
By the bold swimmer, in the swift inslaple
Of accident disastrous. Thomson.
2. The swimmer is situated in the fore legs of a horse, above the knees, and upon the inside, and almost upon the back parts of the hind legs, a little below the ham: this part is without hair, and resembles a piece of hard dry horn. Parrier's Dict.
SWIMMINGLY. adv. [from swimming.] Smoothly; without obstruction. A low word.
John got on the battlements, and called to Nick, I hope the cause goes on swimmingly. Arbutnot.
SWINE. n. f. [from swin, Saxon; swyn, Dutch. It is probably the plural of some old word, and is now the same in both numbers.] A hog; a pig. A creature remarkable for stupidity and rascality.
O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies! Shakespeare.
He will be swine drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bedcloaths. Shakespeare.
Who knows not Circe,
The daughter of the Sun? whose charmed cup
Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape,
And downward fell into a groveling swine. Milton.
Had the upper part, to the middle, been of human shape, and all below swine, had it been murder to destroy it? Locke.
How infinct varies in the grov'ling swine,
Compar'd half reasoning elephant, with thine! Pope.
SWINEHEAD. n. f. A kind of plant; trifles.
SWINEHERD. n. f. [from swine and herd, Saxon.] A keeper of hogs.
There swineherd, that keepeth the hog.
The whole interview between Ulysses and Eumæus has fallen into ridicule: Eumæus has been judged to be of the same rank and condition with our modern swineherds. Brown.
SWINEPIKE. n. f. A bird of the thrush kind. Bailey.
To SWING. v. n. [from swing, Saxon.]
1. To wave too and fro hanging loosely.
I tried if a pendulum would swing faster, or continue swinging longer in our receiver, in case of exsuction of the air, than otherwise. Boyle.
If the coach swing but the least to one side, she used to shriek so loud, that all concluded she was overturned. Arbutnot.
Jack hath hang'd himself: let us go see how he swings. Arb.
When the swinging signs your ears offend
With creaking noise, then rainy floods impend.
2. To fly backward and forward on a rope.
To SWING. v. a. preterite swang, swung.
1. To make to play loosely on a string.
2. To whirl round in the air.
His sword prepar'd
He swang about his head, and cut the winds. Shakespeare.
Take bottles and swing them: fill not the bottles full, but leave some air, else the liquor cannot play nor flower. Bacon.
Swinging a red-hot iron about, or fastening it unto a wheel under that motion, it will sooner grow cold. Brown.
Swing thee in the air, then dash thee down,
To th' hazard of thy brains and shatter'd sides. Milton.
3. To wave loosely.
If one approach to dare his force,
He swings his tail, and swiftly turns him round. Dryden.
SWING. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Motion of any thing hanging loosely.
In casting of any thing, the arms, to make a greater swing, are first cast backward. Bacon's Natural History.
Men use a pendulum, as a more steady and regular motion than that of the earth; yet if any one should ask how he certainly knows that the two successive swings of a pendulum are equal, it would be very hard to satisfy him. Locke.
2. A line on which any thing hangs loose.
3. Influence or power of a body put in motion:
The ram that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poize,
They place before his hand that made the engine. Shakespeare.
In this encyclopedia, and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we're to observe two circles, that, while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the other wheel of the other. Brown.
The descending of the earth to this orbit is not upon that mechanical account Cartesius pretends, namely, the strong swing of the more solid globuli that overflow it. Mor.
4. Course; unrestrained liberty; abandonment to any motive.
Facts unjust
Commit, even to the full swing of his left.
Take thy swing;
For not to take, is but the self-same thing. Dryden.

S W I

- Let them all take their swing
To pillage the king,
And get a blue ribband instead of a string. Swift.
5. Unrestrained tendency.
Where the swing goeth, there follow, fawn, flatter, laugh, and lie lustily at other mens liking. Afham's Schoolmaster.
These exuberant productions only excited and fomented his lusts; so that his whole time lay upon his hands, and gave him leisure to contrive and with full swing pursue his follies. Wood.
Those that are so persuaded, desire to be wife in a way that will gratify their appetites, and so give up themselves to the swing of their unbounded propensities. Glavin's Script. Preface.
Were it not for these, civil government were not able to stand before the prevailing swing of corrupt nature, which would know no honesty but advantage. South.
To SWINGE. v. a. [from swing, Saxon.]
1. To whip; to bastinado; to punish.
Sir, I was in love with my bed: I thank you, you swing'd me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours. Shakespeare's Two Gent. of Verona.
This very rev'rend lecturer, quite worn out
With rheumatism, and crippled with his gout,
Forgets what he in youthful times has done,
And swinges his own vices in his son. Dryden's Juvenal.
The printer brought along with him a bundle of those papers, which, in the phrase of the whig-coffeehouses, have swinged off the Examiner. Swift.
2. To move as a lash. Not in use.
He, wroth to see his kingdom fail,
Swinges the scaly horror of his folded tail. Milton.
SWINGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A sway; a sweep of any thing in motion. Not in use.
The shallow water doth her force infringe,
And renders vain her tail's impetuous swing. Waller.
SWINGBUCKLER. n. f. [from swing and buckler.] A bully; a man who pretends to feats of arms.
You had not four such swingbucklers in all the inns of court again. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
SWINGER. n. f. [from swing.] He who swings; a hurler.
SWINGING. adj. [from swing.] Great; huge. A low word.
The countryman seeing the lion disarmed, with a swinging cudgel broke off the match. L'Estrange.
A good swinging sum of John's readiest cash went towards building of Hocus's countryhouse. Arbutnot.
SWINGINGLY. adv. [from swinging.] Vastly; greatly.
Henceforward he'll print neither pamphlets nor linen,
And, if swearing can do't, shall be swingingly maul'd. Swift.
To SWINGLE. v. n. [from swing.]
1. To dangle; to wave hanging.
2. To swing in pleasure.
SWINISH. adj. [from swine.] Befitting swine; resembling swine; gross; brutal.
They depe us drunkards, and with swinish phrase
Soil our addition. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
SWINISH gluttony
Ne'er looks to heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast;
But, with besotted ease ingratitude,
Crams and blasphemes his feeder. Milton.
To SWINK. v. n. [from swink, Saxon.] To labour; to toil; to drudge. Obsolete.
Riches, renown, and principality,
For which men swink and sweat incessantly. Fairy Queen.
For they do swink and sweat to feed the other,
Who live like lords of that which they do gather. Hub-Tale.
To SWINK. v. a. To overlabour.
The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat. Milton.
SWINK. n. f. [from swink, Saxon.] Labour; toil; drudgery. Obsolete.
Ah, Piers, been thy teeth on edge, to think
How great sport they gaynen with little swinke? Spenser.
Thou's but a lazy loorde,
And rekes much of thy swinke. Spenser.
SWITCH. n. f. A small flexible twig.
Fetch me a dozen crabtree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
When a circle 'bout the wrist
Is made by beadle exorcist,
The body feels the spur and switch. Hudibras.
Mauritania, on the fifth medal, leads a horse with something like a thread; in her other hand she holds a switch. Addison.
To SWITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To lash; to jerk.
Lay thy bridle's weight
Most of thy left side; thy right horse then switching, all thy throat
Spent in encouragements, give him; and all the rein let float. Chapman's Iliad.
SWIVEL. n. f. Something fixed in another body so as to turn round in it.

And I'll be sworn 'tis true. *Shakespeare.*I am sworn brother, sweet,

To grim necessity; and he and I

Will keep a league 'till death. Shak. Richard II.'T hey that are mad against me, are sworn against me. *P.*He refused not the civil offer of a parley, though his sworn enemy; and would eat at the table of those who fought his ruin. Calamy's Sermons.

To shelter innocence.

The nation all elects some patron-knight,

sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,And many a valiant chief enrols his name. *Graville.*SWUM. Preterite and participle passive of swim.

Air, water, earth,

By fowl, fish, beast, was swum, was walk'd and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms? *Bentley.*SWUNG. Preterite and participle passive of swing.

Her hand within her hair she wound, swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground. *Addi.*SWY. adj. [Properly syb, ryb, Saxon.] Related by blood. The Scottish dialect still retains it.

If what my grandfide to me said be true,

Siker I am very syb to you. *Spenser's Pastoral.*SYCAMINE. n. f. A tree.SYCAMORE. n. f. A tree.Sycamore is our acer mojau, one of the kinds of maples; itis a quick grower. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Under the grove of sycamore

I saw your son. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.

If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamore-tree, be thou plucked up, and it should obey you. *Lu. xvii. 6.*I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gatherer of *sya-*more fruit. Anas vii. 14.

Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your bottle of drink

under its hollow root. Waller's Angler.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread;

A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. *Dryden.*SYCOPHANT. n. f. [συκοφαντής; sycophanta, Latin.] A flatterer; a parasite.

Accusing sycophants, of all men, did best sort to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of no evil

they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more tecure, while the fear he had figur'd in his mind had any possibility of event. Sidney.

S Y L

Men know themselves void of those qualities which the impudent sycophants, at the same time, both ascribes to them,and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. *South.*To SYCOPHANT. v. n. [συκοφαντώ; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophant arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. *Government of the Tongue.*SYCOPHANTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Flattering; parafittical.

To SYCOPHANTISE. v. n. [συκοφαντίζω; from sycophant.] Toplay the flatterer. *Dist.*SYLLABICAL. adj. [from syllable.] Relating to syllables; con-

SYLLABLE. n. f. [συλλαβή; syllabe, French.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakespeare.

There is that property in all letters of apertures to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it.

2. Any thing proverbially concise. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,

Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,

To the last syllable of recorded time;

And all our yesterday have lighted fools

The way to dusty death. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. *Swift.*To SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce;

to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable mens names

On fads and fiores, and declare wildernesses. *Milton.*SYLLABUS. n. f. [Rightly SYLLABUS, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllables made at the milking pail,

But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.

Two lines would express all they lay in two pages; 'tis nothing but whipt syllables and froth, without any solidity.

Fulton on the Clastic.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [συλλαβός.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. f. [συλλογισμός; syllogisme, French.] An argument compos'd of three propositions; as, every man thinks;

Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

Unto them a piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of Alop beyond a syllogism in Barbara. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint

and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms? *Bentley.*SYLLOGISTICAL. adj. [συλλογιστικός; from syllogism.] Relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the intire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of

it. *Watts's Logic.*SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogisti-cally; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. *Locke.*To SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogize, French; συλλογίζω.] To reason by syllogism.

Logic is, in effect, an art of syllogizing.

Men have endeavour'd to transform logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. *Watts.*SYLVAN. adj. [Better sylvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,

A sylvan scene; and as the ranks ascend,

Shade above shade, a woody theatre

Of stateliest view. Milton's Paradise Lost.

S Y M

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,

Watch'd by the sylvan genius of the place. *Pope.*SYLVAN. n. f. [sylvain, French.] A wood-god, or satyr.

When the fun begins to sing

His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring

To arch'd walks of twilight groves,

And shadows brown, that sylvan loves,

3. The fare or entertainment itself: as, he keeps a good table.
4. A tablet; a surface on which any thing is written or engraved.
He was the writer of them in the tables of their hearts. Hooker, b. iii.
'Twas pretty, though a plague,

T.

- To see him every hour; to fit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In our hearts table. Shakespeare.
All these true notes of immortality
In our heart's table we shall written find. Davies.
I prepar'd to pay in verities rude
A most detested act of gratitude:
Even this had been your elegy which now
Is offer'd for your health, the table of my vow. Dryden.
There are books extant which the atheist must allow of as proper evidence; even the mighty volumes of visible nature, and the everlasting tables of right reason; wherein if they do not wilfully shut their eyes, they may read their own folly written by the finger of God in a much plainer and more terrible sentence, than Belshazzar's was by the hand upon the wall. Bentley's Sermons.
Among the Romans, the judge or prætor granted administration, not only according to the tables of the testament, but even contrary to those tables. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TACTIUM. n. f. [tactium, Fr. tactio, Lat.] The act of touching.

TADPOLE. n. f. [ταδ, ταδ, and pola, a young one, Saxon.] A young shapeless frog or toad, consisting only of a body and a tail; a porwiggle.

I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point. Shaksp.peare.
Poor Tom eats the toad and the tadpole. Shaksp.peare.

The result is not a perfect frog but a tadpole, without any feet, and having a long tail to swim with. Roy.

A black and round substance began to dilate, and after awhile the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernable, and at last become what the ancients called grynnus, we a porwiggle or tadpole. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

TAFEN, the poetical contraction of taken.

TAFFETA. n. f. [taffetas, Fr. taffetas, Spanish.] A thin silk.

All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!
—Beauties no richer than rich taffetas. Shaksp.peare.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd;
Taffetas phrases, filken terms precise,
Three pild hyperboles. Shaksp.peare's Love's Labour lost.

Some think that a considerable diversity of colours argues an equal diversity of nature, but I am not of their mind for not to mention the changeable taffety, whose colours the philosophers call not real, but apparent. Boyle on Colours.

TAG. n. f. [tag, Islandish, the point of a lance.]

1. A point of metal put to the end of a string.
2. Any thing paltry and mean.

If tag and rag be admitted, learned and unlearned, it is the fault of some, not of the law. Whitgift.

Will you hence
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters. Shaksp.peare's Coriolanus.

The tag-rag people did not clap him and his him. Shak.

having an universal assent, that to a great part of mankind they are not known. Locke.
45. To allow; to admit.
Take not any term, howsoever authorized by the language of the schools, to stand for any thing till you have an idea of
it. Locke.
Chemists take, in our present controversy, something for granted which they ought to prove. Boyle.
46. To receive with fondness.
I lov'd you still, and took your weak excuses,
Took you into my bosom. Dryden.
47. To carry out for use.
He commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, have a staff. Mar. vi. 8.
48. To suppose; to receive in thought; to entertain in opinion.
This I take it
Is the main motive of our preparations. Shakespeare.
The spirits that are in all tangible bodies are scarce known.
Sometimes they take them for vacuum, whereas they are the most active of bodies. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The farmer took himself to have deserved as much as any man, in contributing more, and appearing sooner, in their first approach towards rebellion. Clarendon.
Is a man unfortunate in marriage? Still it is because he was deceived; and so took that for virtue and affection which was nothing but vice in a disguise. South.
Our depraved appetites cause us often to take that for true imitation of nature which has no resemblance of it.
Dryden.
- So soft his tresses, fill'd with trickling pearl,
You'd doubt his sex, and take him for a girl. Tate.

Stones composed of plates are generally parallel, and flexible and elastic: as, talk, cat-silver or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward's Fossils.
Venetian talk kept in a heat of a glass furnace; after all the remaining body, though brittle and discoloured, had not lost much of its bulk, and seemed nearer of kin to talk than mere earth.
TALKATIVE. adj. [from talk.] Full of prate; loquacious.
If I have held you overlong, lay hardly the fault upon my old age, which in its disposition is talkative. Shelton.
This may prove an instructive lesson to the disaffected, not to build any hopes on the talkative zealots of their party. Addison.
I am affraid I cannot make a quicker progress in the French, where everybody is so courteous and talkative. Adams.
The coxcomb bird so talkative and grave,
That from his cage cries cuckold, whore, and knave;
Though many a passenger he rightly call,
You hold him no philosopher at all. Pope.
TALKATIVENESS. n. f. [from talkative.] Loquacity; garrulity; fulness of prate.
We call this talkativeness a feminine vice; but he that shall appropriate loquacity to women, may perhaps sometimes need to light Diogenes's candle to seek a man. Gov. Tongue.
Learned women have lost all credit by their impudent talkativeness and conceit. Swift.
TALKER. n. f. [from talk.]
1. One who talks.
Let me give for instance some of those writers or talkers who deal much in the words nature or fate. Watts.
2. A loquacious person; a pratter.
Keep me company but two years,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.
—farewell, I'll grow a talker for this year. Shakespeare.
If it were desirable to have a child a more brisk talker, ways might be found to make him so; but a wife father had rather his son should be useful when a man, than pretty company. Locke on Education.
3. A boaster; a bragging fellow.
The greatest talkers in the days of peace, have been the most pusillanimous in the day of temptation. Taylor.
TALKY. adj. [from talk.] Consisting of talk; resembling talk.
The talky flakes in the frigate were all formed before the subsidence, along with the sand. Woodward on Fossils.
TALL. adj. [tall, Welsh.]
1. High in stature.
Bring word, how tall the is. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Two of nobler shape,
Erect and tall. Milton.
2. High; lofty.
Winds rust'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vext wildernels, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high, and sturdiest oaks
Bow'd their stiff necks. Milton's Par. Reg. l. vi.
May they encrust as fast, and spread their boughs,
As the high fame of their great owner grows:
May he live long enough to see them all
Dark shadows cast, and as his palace tall!
Methinks I see the love that shall be made,
The lovers walking in that am'rous shade. Waller.
3. Sturdy; lusty.
I'll swear thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I would thou wouldst be a tall fellow of thy hands. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
TALLAGE. n. f. [tallage, French.] Impost; excise.
The people of Spain were better affected unto Philip than to Ferdinand, because he had imposed upon them many taxes and tallages. Bacon's Henry VII.
TALLOW. n. f. [talge, Danish.] The grease or fat of an animal; suet.
She's the kitchen wench and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light. I warrant her rags, and the tallos in them, will burn a Lapland winter. Shakespeare.
In Cuba and Hispaniola are killed divers thousands, whereof the Spaniards only take the tallow or the hide. Abbot.
Snuff the candles close to the tallow, which will make them run. Swift.
To TALLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To grease; to linct with tallow.
TALLOWCHANDLER. n. f. [tallow and chandler, Fr.] One who makes candles of tallow, not of wax.

TAM

- Nastiness, and several nasty trades, as tallowchandlers, butchers, and neglect of cleaning of gutters, are great occasions of a plague. Harvey on the Plague.
TALLY. n. f. [from taller, to cut, Fr.]
1. A stick notched or cut in conformity to another stick, and used to keep accounts by.
So right his judgment was cut fit,
And made a tally to his wit. Hudibras, p. iii.
The only talents in esteem at present are those of Exchange-Alley; one tally is worth a grove of bays. Garth.
Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal panniers sway'd?
Her tallies useless lie and idle,
If plac'd exactly in the middle. Prior.
From his rug she skew'd he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
With just resentment flings it on the ground,
There take my tally of ten thousand pound. Swift.
2. Any thing made to suit another.
So suited in their minds and persons,
That they were fram'd the tallies for each other:
If any alien love had interpos'd,
It must have been an eye-sore to beholders. Dryden.
To TALLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out for any thing.
Nor sister either had, nor brother;
They seem'd just tally'd for each other. Prior.
They are not so well tally'd to the present juncture. Pope.
To TALLY. v. n. To be fitted; to conform; to be suitable.
I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
TALMUD. n. f. The book containing the Jewish traditions, the rabbinical constitutions and explanations of the law.
TALNESS. n. f. [from tall.] Height of stature; procerity.
An hideous giant, horrible and high,
That with his talness seem'd to threaten the sky. Fairy Qu.
The eyes behold so many naked bodies, as for talness of stature could hardly be equalled in any country. Hayward.
TALON. n. f. [talon, French.] The claw of a bird of prey.
It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Upward the noble bird directs his wings,
And twirling round his master's earth-born foes,
Swift he collects his fatal flock of ire.
Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked fire. Prior.
TAMARIND tree. n. f. [tamarindus, Lat.]
The flower of the tamarind tree consists of several leaves, which are so placed as to resemble a papilionaceous one in some measure; but these expand circularly, from whose many leaved flower-cup rises the point, which afterward becomes a flat pod, containing many flat angular seeds surrounded with an acid blackish pulp.
Lenitives are cassia, tamarinds, manna. Wise's Surgery.
Lay me reclin'd
Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes,
Fan'd by the breeze its fever-cooling fruit. Thomson.
TAMARISK. n. f. [tamariscus, Lat.]
The flowers of the tamarisk are roseaceous, consisting of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly; from whose flower-cup rises the point, which afterward becomes a pod, somewhat like those of the fallow, which opens into two parts, and contains several downy seeds. Miller.
Tamarisk is a tree that grows tall, and its wood is medicinal. Martini's Hyg. bandy.
TAMBARINE. n. f. [tambourin, Fr.] A tambor; a small drum.
Calliope with mules moos,
Soon as thy oaten pipe began to sound,
Their ivory lutes and tambor nes forego. Spenser's Past.
TAME. adj. [tame, Saxon; tam, Dutch; tam, Danish.]
1. Not wild; domestic.
Thales the Milesian said, That of all wild beasts a tyrant is the worst, and of all tame beasts a flatterer. Addison.
2. Crushed; subdued; dejected; dejected; spiritless; heartless.
If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it. Shakespeare.
And now their pride and nettles is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull. Shakespeare.
A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Praise him each savage furious beast,
That on his shores do daily feast;
And you tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow. Rowson.
3. Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem. A low phrase.
To TAME. v. n. [lgatangen, Gothic; temean, Saxon; tamen, Dutch.]
1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim; to make gentle.
Those that tame wild horses,

TAN

- Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits. Shakespeare.
2. To subdue; to crush; to deprecate; to conquer.
If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself. Shakespeare, King Lear.
They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches! not by making
Baths, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing them out again. B. Johnson.
A puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shakespeare.
A race unconquer'd, by their clime made bold,
The Caledonians arm'd with want and cold,
Have been kept for you to tame. Waller.
TAMABLE. adj. [from tame.] Susceptive of taming.
Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong flight, and easily tamable; divers of which may be so brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man. Wilkins.
TAMELY. adj. [from tame.] Not wildly; meanly; spiritlessly.
True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
What courage tamely could to death consent,
And not by striking first the blow prevent. Dryden.
Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravish'd crown? Dryden.
Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on and let them pass? Addison.
Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused. Swift.
TAMENESS. n. f. [from tame.]
1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.
2. Want of spirits; timidity.
Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults. Rogers.
TAMER. n. f. [from tame.] Conqueror; subduer.
He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.
TAMMY. n. f. A woollen stuff.
TAMKIN. n. f. The floppe of the mouth of a great gun.
To TAMPER. v. a. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from temper, Latin.]
1. To be busy with physick.
Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your skull
As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras, p. ii.
He tried waives to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Estrange's Fables.
2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.
That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless. Decay of Piety.
'Tis dangerous tampering with a muse,
The profits small, and you have much to lose;
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race. Rowson.
Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison's Freeholder.
3. To deal; to practise with.
Others tamper'd
For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert. Hudibras.
To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dutch; tamen, French.]
1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.
A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some liny soil, was tanned or turned into a kind of leather. Grew's Mus.
Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef; but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them. Swift.
They fell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Swift's Miscel.
2. To imbrown by the sun.
His face all tam'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a Summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind. Fa. Qu. b. i.
Like sun parch'd quarters on the city gates,
Such is thy tam'd skin's lamentable state.
A brown for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tam'd. Cleaveland.
TAN. n. f. [tanen, Dan.]
The trophæes tane from th' East and Western shore,
And both those nations twice triumph'd o'er. Mary's Virg.
TANG. n. f. [tanges, Dutch, acid.]
1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.
Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also seasons; so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. Saunders's Sermons.

It is strange that the soul should never once recal over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cake, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it. Shakespeare.

She had a tongue with a tang, Shakespeare.

Would cry to a tailor, go hang, Shakespeare.

4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tone or twang.

There is a pretty affectation in the Allemain, which gives their speech a different tang from ours. Holder.

To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, furly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. Shakespeare.

TANGENT. n. f. [tangent, Fr. tangens, Lat.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent. Trevoux.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbits, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley's Sermon.

TANGIBLE. n. f. [from tangible.] The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TANGIBLE. adj. [from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth.

To TANGLE. v. a. [See entangle.]

1. To implicate; to knit together.

2. To enmesh; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair, Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream. Shakespeare.

I do, quoth he, perceive

My king is tangl'd in affection to

A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shakespeare.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires

By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes

Shall be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakespeare.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,

Stands with the flames of war to tangle thee. Shakespeare.

Now ly't victorious

Among thy slain fell-kill'd,

Not willingly, but tangl'd in the fold

Of dire necessity. Milton's Agonistes.

Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw

Hearts after them, tangl'd in amorous nets. Milton.

With subtle cobweb cheats,

They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;

In which when once they are entangl'd,

The more they stir, the more they're tangl'd. Hudibras.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,

Tangl'd in forbidden ways:

He, my shepherd! is my guide,

He's before me, on my side. Cragshaw.

To TANGLE. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd

All path of man or beast.

TANGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A knot of things mingled in one another.

He leading swiftly rowl'd

In tangles, and made intricate seem strait,

To mischief swift. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,

Or with the tangles of Neera's hair. Milton.

TANIST. n. f. [an Irish word; an tanisther, Erse.]

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother, and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captaincy. Spenser on Ireland.

TANISTRY. n. f. [from tanist.]

The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted therunto by election. Spenser on Ireland.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanistry? which makes all their possessions uncertain. Davies on Ireland.

TAP

By the Irish custom of tanistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chieftaincies; and when their chieftains were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tanists, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand. Davies on Ireland.

TANK. n. f. [tanque, Fr.] A large cistern or basin.

Handle your pruning-knife with dexterity; go tightly to your business: you have cost me much, and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, rascal; falling in the garden and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

TANKARD. n. f. [tanguard, French; tankard, Dutch; tancaird, Irish.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

Hath his tankard touch'd your brain?

Sure they're fall'n asleep again. Benj. Johnson.

Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus. Arbutnot on Cato.

When any calls for ale, fill the largest tankard cup top full.

TANNER. n. f. [from tan.] One whose trade is to tan leather.

TANNERS. n. f. [from tan.] One whose trade is to tan leather.

TAR

TAPER. n. f. [taper, Saxon.] A wax candle; a light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius.

When it is lighted come and call me. Shakespeare.

My daughter and little son we'll dress

With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,

And rattle in their hands. Shakespeare.

If any snatch the pure taper from my hand, and hold it to the devil, he will only burn his own fingers, but shall not rob me of the reward of my good intention. Taylor.

There the fair light,

Like hero's taper in the window plac'd,

Such fate from the malignant air did find,

As that expos'd to the boist'rous wind. Waller.

To see this fleet

Heav'n, as if there wanted lights above,

For tapers made two glaring comets rise. Dryden.

The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night shriek. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. As the last taste of sweets is sweetest last. Shakespeare, R. II.

That sensation which all things taken into the mouth give particularly to the tongue, the papillæ of which are the principal instruments hereof. Quincy.

5. Intellectual relish or discernment.

Seeing they pretend no quarrel at other psalms which are in like manner appointed to be daily read, why do these so much offend and displease their tastes? Hooker.

Sion's songs to all true tastes exelling,
Where God is prais'd aright. Milton.

I have no taste
Of popular applause. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

As he had no taste of true glory, we see him equipped like an Hercules, with a club and a lion's skin. Addison.

This metaphor would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste which gives us a relish of every flavour. Addison.

Your way of life, in my taste, will be the best.

I see how ill a taste for wit and sense prevails in the world. Swift.

Pleasure results from a sense to discern, and a taste to be affected with beauty. Seed's Sermons.

6. An essay; a trial; an experiment. Not in use.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote as an essay or taste of my virtue. Shakespeare.

To the poor devil that has scarce a tatter. L'Estrange.

TATTERDEMATION. n. f. [tatter and I know not what.] A ragged fellow.

As a poor fellow was trudging along in a bitter cold morning with never a rag, a spark that was warm clad called to this tatterdemation, how he could endure this weather? L'Estrange.

To TATTLE. v. n. [tateren, Dutch.] To prate; to talk idly;
to use many words with little meaning.

He stands on terms of honourable mind,
Ne will be carried with every common wind
Of court's inconstant mutability. Hubbard's Tale.

TED

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.

Is't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shakespeare.
This clears the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And dries the tearful sluices of despair:
Charm'd with that virtuous draught th' exalted mind
All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope's Odyssey.
On Celadon her eye
Fell tearful, wetting her disorder'd cheek. Thomson.

But indefatigable teasing. Butler.
My friends always tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator, No. 475.
After having been present in publick debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.
We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. f. [teap, Saxon; dipsacus, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the teasel hath no proper calyx, but leaves representing the perianthium encompassing the bottom of the head: the little flowers which are produced singly from between the scales, are collected into an head somewhat like a bee-hive; these are succeeded by longish four-cornered seeds:
the species are three: one is called carduus fullonum, and is of singular use in raising the knap upon woollen cloth. Miller.
TEASER. n. f. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incessant importunity.

A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf to the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.
TEAT. n. f. [teah, Welsh; te, Saxon; tette, Dutch; teton, French.] The dug of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shakespeare.
Shows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.
When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer, that they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even. Milton.
Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat dissent
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

TECHILY. adv. [from techy.] Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

they call tedding. Mortimer's Husband.

Prudent his fall'n heaps Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grafs, and the sun's mellowing beams, Rivall'd with artful heats. Philips.

TE'DDER or TETHER. n. f. [tudder, Dut. timet, a rope, Islandick.]
1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field that he may not pasture too wide. Freight, &c.

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.
We lived joyfully, going abroad within our tedder. Bacon.

We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder, they cannot run far from us. Child.

TE DEUM. n. f. An hymn of the church, so called from the two first words of the Latin.
The choir,
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung te deum. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Te deum was sung at Saint Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TEE

TE'DIOUS. adj. [tedious, Fr. tedium, Latin.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.
That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words.

The one intente, the other still remits,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove tedious alike. Milton.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity.
They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker, b. i.

3. Slow.

Chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Milton.

TE'DIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from tedious.]
1. Wearisomeness by continuance.
2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.
Since brevity's the foul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

4. Uneasiness; tirefomeness; quality of wearying.
In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often, to interrupt them; which tedious-ness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is compleat. Hooker, b. i.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Dome.

She diffastes them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

To TEEM. v. n. [team, Saxon, offspring.]
1. To bring young.

If the must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart distatur'd torment to her. Shakespeare.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.
Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age? Shakespeare.

When the rising Spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

There are fundamental truths the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.
We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politics. Addison.

To TEEM. v. a.
1. To bring forth; to produce.

What's the newest grief?
Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Common mother, thou
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
Teems and feeds all. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

The earth obey'd; and fruit
Op'ning her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth Innumerable living creatures. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from temmen, Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it:
as, teem that water out; hence Swift took this word.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the gla'ss with small beer. Swift's Direction to the Butler.

TE'EMFUL. adj. [teampul, Saxon.]
2. Pregnant; prolific. Ainsl.

2. Brimful.
TE'EMER. n. f. [from teem.] One that brings young.

TE'EMLESS. adj. [from teem.] Unfruitful; not prolific.
Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of death,
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth. Dryden.

TEEN. n. f. [teuan, Saxon, to kindle; teenen, Flemish, to vex;
teonan, Saxon, injuries.] Sorrow; grief.

Arrived there
That barehead knights, for dread and doleful teen
Would fain have fled, ne durst approachen near. Fa. 2<sup>d</sup>.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen. Spenser.
My heart bleeds
To think o' th' teens that I have turn'd you to. Shakespeare.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I teen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shak.

TEL

To TEEN. v. a. [from teuan, to kindle, Saxon.] To excite;
to provoke to do a thing. Spenser.

TEENS. n. f. [from teen for ten.] The years reckoned by the termination teen; as, thirteen, fourteen.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes;
Begotten at his entrance, in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the muse the more for being a boy. Granville.

TEETH, the plural of tooth.
Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job xli. 14.

To TERTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment. Arbutnot on Diet.

TE'GUMENT. n. f. [tegumentum, Latin.] Cover; the outward part. This word is seldom used but in anatomy or physics.

Clip and trim those tender fringes in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments. Wise's Surgery.

In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace between the green pericarpium and the hard shell. Ray on the Creation.

To TEH-HE. v. n. [a cant word made from the found.] To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachinnation;
to titter.

They laugh'd and teh-he'd with derision,
To see them take your deposition. Hudibras, p. iii.

TEIL tree. n. f. [tille, Latin.] The same with linden or lime tree: which see.

A teillre and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Jsa. vi. 13.

TEINT. n. f. [teinte, French.] Colour; touch of the pencil.
Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TE'LARY. adj. [tela, a web, Lat.] Spinning webs.
The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. v.

TELESCOPE. n. f. [telescope, Fr. teles and skopion.] A long gla'ss by which distant objects are viewed.

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shews the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCOPICAL. adj. [from telescope.] Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

To TELL. v. a. preterite and part. told. [tellan, Saxon;
tellen, Dutch; talen, Danish.]

1. To utter; to express; to speak.
I will not eat till I have told mine errand. Gen. xxiv. 33.
Thy message which might elie in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton.

2. To relate; to rehearse; to speak.
I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job xv. 18.

When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipp'd. Judg. vii. 13.

His generation.
You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out. Dryden.

Th' usurper of my throne is my wife!
The rest are vanish'd, none repa's'd the gate,
And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To teach; to inform.
He gently ask'd where all the people be,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell,
Who answer'd him full sooth, he could not tell. Fa. 2<sup>d</sup>.

I told him of myself, which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Tell me now, what lady is the fame,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to day promis'd to tell me of. Shakespeare.

The fourth part of a shekel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Sam. ix. 8.

Saint Paul *tell*th us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake. Bishop Sanderson.

Tell me how may I know him, how adore. Milton.

4. To discover; to betray.
They will tell it to the inhabitants. Nim. xiv. 14.

5. To count; to number.
Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
So early wife, and lasting fair;
That none, except her years they told,
Thought her a child, or thought her old.
Numerous falls the fearful only tell;
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers grows. Dryden.
A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

She doubts if two and two make four,
Though she has told them ten times o'er. Prior.

6. To make excuses. A low word.
Tush, never tell me, I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse,
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this. Shak.

To TELL. v. n.
1. To give an account; to make report.
I will compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Psal. xxvi. 7.

Ye that live and move, fair creatures tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here? Milton.

2. To TELL on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.
David sav'd neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, left they should tell on us, saying, so did David. 1 Sam. xxvii. 11.

TE'LLTALE. n. f. [tell and tale.] One who gives malicious information; one who carries officious intelligence.

You speak to Caius, and to such a man
That is no fearing telltale. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

What shall these papers lie like telltales here? Shakespeare.
Let not the heav'n's hear these telltale women

Rail on the Lord's anointed.
'Tis done; report displays her telltale wings,
And to each ear the news and tidings brings. Fairfax.

And to the telltale sun decry
Our conceal'd solemnity. Milton.

Eurydice and he are prisoners here,
But will not long be so: this telltale ghost
Perhaps will clear them both. Dryden and Lee.

A telltale out of school
Is of all wits the greatest fool. Swift.

TE'LLER. n. f. [from tell.]
1. One who tells or relates.
2. One who numbers; a numberer.

3. A teller is an officer of the exchequer, of which there are four in number: their business is to receive all monies due to the king, and give the clerk of the pell a bill to charge him therewith: they also pay all persons any money payable to them by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt: they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver the lord treasurer. Cowel.

TE'MERARIOUS. adj. [temerarius, Fr. temerarius, Lat.]
1. Rash; heady.

Resolution without foresight is but a temerarious folly; and the consequences of things are the first point to be taken into consideration. L'Estrange.

2. Careless; heedless.
Should he find upon one single sheet of parchment, an oration written full of profound sense, adorned with elegant phrase, the wit of man could not persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dashes of an unguided pen. Ray.

TE'MERITY. n. f. [temeritas, Latin.] Rashness; unreasonable contempt of danger.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

To TE'MPER. v. a. [tempero, Lat. temperer, Fr.]
1. To mix so as that one part qualifies the other.

I shall temper so
Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most Them fully satisfy'd, and These appeale. Milton.

2. To compound; to form by mixture.
If you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it;
That Romeo should upon receipt thereof
Soon sleep in quiet. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

3. To mingle.
Prepare the sixth part of an ephah and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour. Exek. xvi. 14.

per'd* itself to every man's liking. Wisd. xvi. 21.

These soft fires with kindly heat
Of various influence foment and warm,
Temper or nourish. Milton.

6. To soften; to mollify; to assuage; to soothe; to calm.
Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, labour'd to temper their warlike courages with sweet delights of learning and sciences: so that as much as the one excelled in arms, the other excelled in knowledge. Spenser on Ireland.

With this she wons to temper angry Jove,
When all the gods he threatens with thund'ring dart. Spenser.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have. Shakespeare.

Woman! Nature made thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without you. Orway.

7. To

7. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.
The sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton.
In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very differing tempers as to brittleness or toughness. Boyle.
Repeated peals they hear.
And, in a heav'n serene, resplendent arms appear;
Red'ning the skies, and glittering all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound. Dryd.
8. To govern. A latinism.
And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth. Hubbard's Tale.
TE'MPER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.
Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and tem- per than the abundant growing of the palm trees. Raleigh.
Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries. Arbutnot.
2. Middle course; mean or medium.
If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant before the reformation, the present clergy's wishes reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used instead of paring them so quick. Swift's Miscell.
3. Constitution of body.
This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below, and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. Disposition of mind.
Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard, and judg'd, Without wrath or reviling. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only tem- per wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke on Education.
5. Constitutional frame of mind.
The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Our hearts,
Of brothers temper, do receive you in
With all kind love. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
6. Calmness of mind; moderation.
Restore yourselves unto your temper, fathers,
And without perturbation hear me speak. Benj. Johnson.
Teach me, like thee, in various nature wife,
To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.
7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.
Here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal. Shakespeare.
Ithuriel with his spear
Touch'd lightly; for no fallhood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness: up he starts, Discover'd, and surpris'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
These needles should have a due temper; for if they are too soft, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too brittle they snap. Sharp.
TE'MPERAMENT. n. f. [temperamentum, Lat. temperantia, Fr.]
1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.
Bodies are denominated hot and cold in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied.
2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.

tempers, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and tem- perament. Hale.
TE'MPERAMENTAL. adj. [from temperament.] Constitutional.
That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, that may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Intellectual representations are received with as unequal a fate upon a bare temperamental relish or disgust. Glanville.
TE'MPERANCE. n. f. [temperantia, Lat.]
1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.
Well observe
The rule of not too much; by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton.
Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, gives indolence of body and tranquillity of mind;
the best guardian of youth and support of old age. Temple.
Make temperance thy companion; so shall health
Sit on thy brow.
2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation of passion.
His fenceless speech and doted ignorance,
When as the noble prince had marked well;
He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance. Fa. Qu.

- TE'MPERATE. adj. [temperatus, Lat.]
1. Not excessive; moderate in degree of any quality.
Use a temperate heat, for they are ever temperate heats that digest and mature; wherein we mean temperate, according to the nature of the subject; for that may be temperate to fruits and liquors which will not work at all upon metals. Bacon.
Was airy, light, from pure digestion bred,
And temper'd vapours drank. Milton.
2. Moderate in meat and drink.
I advis'd him to be temperate in eating and drinking. Wifem.

earlier, shew the temperature of weather.
Memory depends upon the confidence and the temperature of the brain. Watts.
2. Mediocrity; due balance of contraries.
As the world's sun doth effects beget
Different, in divers places ev'ry day;
Here Autumn's temperature, there Summer's heat,
Here flow'ry Spring-tide, and there Winter gray. Daniel.
If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality, or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.
In that proud port which her so goodly grace,
Most goodly temperature you may discern.
TE'MPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.
When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,
To stop his ears against admonishment? Shakespeare.
TE'MPEST. n. f. [tempesta, Fr. tempestas, Lat.]
1. The utmost violence of the wind; the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual excess of its force seems to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.
I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Some have been driven by tempest to the south.
What at first was call'd a gust, the same Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name. Deppe.
We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfix'd. Milton.
With clouds and storms
Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd,
Thou humblest nature with thy northern blast. Tompion.
2. Any tumult; commotion; perturbation.
The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there. Shakespeare's King Lear.

They might their grievance inwardly complain,
But outwardly they needs must temporize. Daniel.
3. To comply: this is improper.
The dauphin is too wilful opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties:
He flady says, he'll not lay down his arms. Shakespeare.
TE'MPORIZER. n. f. [temporiseur, Fr. from temporize.] One that complies with times or occasions; a trimmer.
I pronounce thee a hovering temporizer, that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
TE'MSE BREAD. } n. f. [temse, Dutch; tamise, Fr. tamise-TE'MSED BREAD. } fire, Italian, to sift; tems, Dutch; ta-mis, French; tamiso, Italian, a sieve.] Bread made of flower better sifted than common.
To TEMPT. v. a. [tempto, Lat. tenter, Fr.]
1. To solicit to ill; to incite by presenting some pleasure or advantage to the mind; to entice.
'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower:
My lady Gray tempts him to this horrid extremity. Shak.
You ever gentle gods, take my breath from me;
Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Come together, that Satan tempt you not. 1 Cor. vii. 5.
He that hath not wholly subdued himself, is quickly tempt- ed and overcome in small things. Bishop Taylor.
Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold Might tempt alone. Milton.
The devil can but tempt and deceive; and if he cannot destroy so, his power is at an end. South.
O wretched maid!
Whole roving fancy would resolve the fame
With him, who next should tempt her easy fame. Prior.
2. To provoke.
I'm much too vent'rous
In tempting of your patience. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
With-hold
Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;
For, though your violence shoud leave 'em bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.
3. It is sometimes used without any notion of evil; to solicit;
to draw.
Still his strength conceal'd
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall. Milton.
The rowing crew,
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.
4. To try; to attempt.
This from the vulgar branches must be torn,
And to fair Proserpine the present born,
Ere leave be giv'n to tempt the nether skies. Dryden.
TE'MPTATION. n. f. [tentation, Fr. from tempt.]
1. The act of tempting; solicitation to ill; enticement.
All temptation to transgress repel. Milt.
2. The state of being tempted.
When by human weakness, and the arts of the tempter, you are led into temptations, prayer is the thread to bring you out of this labyrinth. Duppa.
3. That which is offered to the mind as a motive to ill.
Set a deep glass of rhenish wine on the contrary casket;
for if the devil be within, and that temptation without, he will choose it. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Dare to be great without a guilty crown;
View it, and lay the bright temptation down:
'Tis bait to seize on all. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
TE'MPTABLE. adj. [from tempt.] Liable to temptation; obnoxious to bad influence.
If the parliament were as temptable as any other assembly, the managers must fail for want of tools to work with. Swift.
TE'MPTER. n. f. [from tempt.]
1. One who solicits to ill; an enticer.
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
Not she; nor doth the tempt. Shak. Meas. for Measure.

TEMULENT, adj. [temulentus, Lat.] Inebriated; intoxicated as with strong liquors.

TENS, adj. [ten, Saxon; ten, Dutch.] The decimal number; twice five; the number by which we multiply numbers into new denominations.

Thou shalt have more Than two tens to a score.
Ten hath been extolled as containing even, odd, long, and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers; and Aristotle observed, that Barbarians as well as Greeks used a numeration unto ten.

With twice ten sail I cross'd the Phrygian sea,
Scarce seven within your harbour meet.
There's a proud modesty in merit,
Averse from begging; and resolv'd to pay
Ten times the gift it asks.

From the soft lyre,
Sweet flute, and ten string'd instrument, require Sounds of delight.

Although English is too little cultivated, yet the faults are nine in ten owing to affectation.

TENABLE, adj. [tenable, French.] Such as may be maintained against opposition; such as may be held against attacks.

The town was strong of itself, and wanted no industry to fortify and make it tenable.

Sir William Ogle seized upon the castle, and put it into a tenable condition.

Infidelity has been driven out of all its outworks: the atheist has not found his post tenable, and is therefore retired into desim.

TENACIOUS, adj. [tenax, Lat.] Inclined to hold fast; not willing to let go, with of before the thing held.

A resolute tenacious adherence to well chosen principles, makes the face of a governor shine in the eyes of those that see his actions.

He is tenacious of his own property, and ready to invade that of others.

Retentive.
The memory in some is very tenacious; but yet there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deepest, and in minds the most retentive.

TENACE, French.] Having parts disposed to adhere to each other; cohesive.

Three equal round vessels filled, the one with water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors stirred alike to give them a vortical motion; the pitch by its tenacity will lose its motion quickly, the oil being less tenacious will keep it longer, and the water being less tenacious will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time.

TENACIOUSLY, adv. [from tenacious.] With disposition to hold fast.

Some things our juvenile reasons tenaciously adhere to, which yet our maturer judgments disallow of.

TENACIOUSNESS, n. f. [from tenacious.] Unwillingness to quit, resign, or let go.

TENACITY, n. f. [tenacitas, tenacit, Fr. tenax, Latin.] Viscosity; glutinousness; adhesion of one part to another.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another till they all rested among themselves.

Substances, whose tenacity exceeds the powers of digestion, will neither pass, nor be converted into aliment.

TENANCY, n. f. [tenanche, old French; tenentia, law Latin; from tenant.] Temporary possession of what belongs to another.

the blind goddess. Hoswell's Vocal Forest

It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to play at tennis with his page. Peachment

The inside of the uvea is blacked like the walls of a tennis court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the uvea, be returned again;
for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused. Morr's Antidote against Atrophia

We conceive not a tennis ball to think, and consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest.

We have no exedra for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alehouses. Arbutnot and Pope

To TENNIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball.
Those four garçons issuing forth upon the enemy, will so

TENOUR. n. f. [tenor, Lat. teneur, Fr.]
1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity;
general currency.

We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not knit together to one constant end, but dissipated in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed. Sidney

When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So smil'd the days, and so the tenor ran
Of their felicity: a spring was there,
An everlasting spring, the jolly year

Led round in his great circle, no winds breath
As now did smelt of Winter or of death. Cromwell

Still I see the tenor of man's woe
Hold on the same, from woman to begin.
Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness to all men. Spratt

Reading it must be repeated again and again with a close attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses. Locke

3. A sound in music.
The treble cutteth the air too sharp to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest part.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 173.

TENSE. adj. [tenus, Lat.] Stretched; stiff; not lax.
For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of the membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound. Haller

TENSE. n. f. [tempus, Fr. tempus, Lat.] [In grammar.] Tense, in strict speaking, is only a variation of the verb to signify time.

As foresight, when it is natural, answers to memory, so when methodical it answers to reminiscence, and may be called forecast; all of them expressed in the tenses given to verbs. Memory faith, I did see; reminiscence, I had seen; foresight, I shall see; forecast, I shall have seen. Grew

Ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles are, speak as properly and as correctly as gentlemen. Locke

He should have the Latin words given him in their first case and tense, and should never be left to seek them himself from a dictionary. Watts

TENSENESS. n. f. [from tense.] Contraction; tension: the contrary to laxity. Should

TENTH. adj. [decima, Saxon.] First after the ninth; ordinal of ten.

It may be thought the less strange if others cannot do as much at the tenth or twentieth trial, as we did after much practice. Boyle

TEP

TENTH. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The tenth part.
Of all the horses,
The treasure in the field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth. Shakspeare Coriolanus

By decimation and a tithed death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loaths, take thou the destin'd tenth. Shak.

To purchase but the tenth of all their share,
Would make the mighty Persian monarch poor. Dryden

Suppose half an ounce of silver now worth a bushel of wheat; but should there be next year a scarcity, five ounces of silver would purchase but one bushel: so that money would be then nine tenths less worth in respect of food. Locke

2. Tithes.
With cheerful heart
The tenth of thy increase bestow, and own
Heav'n's bounteous goodness, that will sure repay
Thy grateful duty. Philips

3. Tenths are that yearly portion or tribute which all livings ecclesiastical yield to the king. The bishop of Rome pretended right to this revenue by example of the high priest of the Jews, who had tenths from the Levites, till by Henry the eighth they were annexed perpetually to the crown. Cowel

TENTHLY. adv. [from tenth.] In the tenth place.

leaves.

TENUITY. n. f. [tenuitas, French; tenuitas, from tenuis, Lat.]
Thinness; exility; smallness; minuteness; not grossness.

Firs and pines mount of themselves in height without side boughs; partly heat, and partly tenuity of juices, sending the sap upwards. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 533.

The tenuity and contempt of clergymen will soon let them see what a poor carcass they are, when parted from the influence of that supremacy. King Charles

Consider the divers figurings of the brain; the strings or filaments thereof; their difference in tenuity, or aptness for motion. Glover's Serf.

Aliment circulating through an animal body, is reduced to an almost imperceptible tenuity, before it can serve animal purposes. Arbutnot

At the height of four thousand miles the æther is of that wonderful tenuity, that if a small sphere of common air, of an inch diameter, should be expanded to the thinness of that æther, it would more than take up the orb of Saturn, which is many million times bigger than the earth. Bentley

TENUOUS. adj. [tenuis, Lat.] Thin; small; minute.

Another way of their attraction is by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, which after some distance retracteth unto itself. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. ii.

TENSURE. n. f. [tenso, Lat. teneur, Fr. tenura, law Latin.]
Tensure is the manner whereby tenements are holden of their lords. In Scotland are four tensures; the first is pura eleemosina, which is proper to spiritual men, paying nothing for it, but devota animarum suffragia; the second they call feu, which holds of the king, church, barons, or others, paying a certain duty called feudum firma; the third is a holding in blanch by payment of a penny, roffe, pair of gilt spurs, or some such thing, if asked; the fourth is by service of ward and relief, where the heir being minor is in the custody of his lord, together with his lands, &c. and land holden in this fourth manner is called feudum de hauberk or haubert, feudum militare or loricaum. Tensure in gross is the tensure in capite; for the crown is called a feignory in gross, because a corporation of and by itself. Cowel

The service follows the tensure of lands; and the lands were given away by the kings of England to those lords. Spenser

The uncertainty of tensure, by which all worldly things are held, ministers very unpleasant meditation. Raleigh

Man must be known, his strength, his state,
And by that tensure he holds all of fate. Dryden

TEPEFACTION. n. f. [tepefactio, Latin.] The act of warming to a small degree.

TEPID. adj. [tepidus, Latin.] Lukewarm; warm in a small degree.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon, b. viii.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

I'll march the music Hamlet.
The fair example of the heavy lark.
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the fairs let thy bold musick found,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world,
Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful philomel and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had his special engines been to rear
His fortunes up unto the state they were,
Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill,
'Tis like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes be is cut off.

In this scale worth, in father gold does lie. Cowley.

4. In the following passage the is is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries. Addison on Italy.

THEATRE. n. f. [theatre, Fr. theatrum, Lat.]

1. A place in which shews are exhibited; a playhouse.

This wife and universal theatre,
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play. Shakespeare, As you like it.

When the boats came within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, yet so as they might go about, so as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light. Bacon.

2. A place rising by steps like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.

In the midst of this fair valley flood
A native theatre, which rising slow,
By just degrees o'erlook'd the ground below. Dryden.

THEATRICAL. adv. [theatrum, Latin.] Scenick; suiting a theatre.

THEATRICAL. n. f. theatre; pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms fickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart. Doddy of Piety.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

THEATRICALITY. adv. [from theatrical.] In a manner suiting the stage.

Dauntless her look, her gesture proud,
Her voice theatrically loud. Swift's Miscel.

THE. the oblique singular of thou.

Poet and saint, to thee alone was giv'n
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

THEFT. n. f. [from theft.]

1. The act of stealing.

Theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will. Cowell.

His thefts were too open, his filching was like an unskilful finger, he kept not time. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

Their nurse Euripile, Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children. Shak.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. Exod. xxii. 4.

THEIR. n. f. [Scena, of them, Saxon.] Of them: the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens. Shak.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccaccio, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccaccio. Dryden.

2. Their is used when any thing comes between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow, and they never in their to refuse. Hooker, b. v.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs which out of thine will grow. Milton.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears,
Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Dinkam.

Vain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their cares,
The fault is more their languages than theirs. Roscommon.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And reading with, like theirs, our fate and fame. Pope.

THE. the oblique of they.

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEME. n. f. [theme, Fr. from thema.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being.

Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme;
Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Whatever near Europa's happy streams
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme. Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Hernus swells with tides of gold,
From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;
These now no more shall be the muse's themes,
Loft in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topic.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

Let scholars daily reduce the words to their original or theme, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs. Watts.

THEMSELVES. n. f. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons.

Whatever evil befalleth in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it. Hooker, b. v.

2. The oblique case of they and felous.

They open to themselves at length the way. Milton.

Waken children out of sleep with a low call, and give them kind usage till they come perfectly to themselves. Lacke.

THE. adv. [than, Gothic; than, Saxon; than, Dutch.]

1. At that time.

The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his majesty throughout that whole journey. Clarendon.

Then, then a boy, with my arms I laid. Dryden.

2. Afterwards; immediately afterwards; soon afterwards.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in Winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in Summer. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 437.

3. In that case; in consequence.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Lacke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealousies and fears, and, while you may,
To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now flaves with level wing the deep, then soars. Milton.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. L'Estr.

6. That time; it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew
The force of those dire arms? Milton.

THENCE. n. f. [contracted, according to Minshew, from thence hence.]

1. From that place.

Fast by the oracle of God; I thence Invoke thy aid. Milton.

Surat he took, and thence preventing fame,
By quick and painful marches thither came. Dryden.

2. From that time.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days. Ja. lxx.

3. For that reason.

Not to fit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous about him. Milton's Agonist.

4. From thence is a barbarous expression, thence implying the same.

From thence; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his parting with her; thence
We have cross'd. Shakespeare.

There plant eyes, all must from thence Purge and disperse. Milton.

THE. conjunction. [thence and forth.]

1. From that time.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made To ambitious Rome.
They shall be placed in Leicester, and have land given them to live upon, in such sort as shall become good subjects, to labour thenceforth for their living. Spenser, on Ireland.

Wrath shall be no more
Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire. Milton.

2. From thenceforth is a barbarous corruption crept into later books.

THE

His holy eyes; resolving from thenceforth
To leave them to their own polluted ways. Milton.
Men grow acquainted with these self-evident truths upon their being proposed; but whoever does so, finds in himself that he then begins to know a proposition which he knew not before, and which from thenceforth he never questions. Locke.
THENCEFORTHWARD. adv. [thence and forward.] On from that time.
THEOCRACY. n. f. [theocratic, Fr. théocratique and aristocratie.] Government immediately superintended by God.
The characters of the reign of Christ are chiefly justice, peace, and divine preference or conduct, which is called theocracy. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
THEOCRATIC. adj. [theocratic, Fr. from theocracy.] Relating to a government administered by God.
The government is neither human nor angelical, but peculiarily theocratical. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
THEODOLITE. n. f. A mathematical instrument for taking heights and distances.
THEOGONY. n. f. [theogonic, Fr. généalogie.] The generation of the gods. Bailey.
THEOLOGIAN. n. f. [theologian, Fr. théologien, Latin.] A divine; a professor of divinity.
Some theologians desire places erected only for religion by defending oppressions. Hayward.
They to their viands fell: nor seemingly
The angel, nor in mist, the common glois
Of theologians, but with keen dispatch
Of real hunger. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
THEOLOGICAL. adj. [theologique, Fr. théologique, Lat.] Relating to the science of divinity.
Although some pens have only symbolized the fame from the mystery of its colours, yet are there other affections might admit of theological allusions. Brown.
They generally are extracts of theological and moral sentences, drawn from ecclesiastical and other authors. Swift.
THEOLOGICALLY. adv. [from theological.] According to the principles of theology.
THEOLOGIST. n. f. [theologus, Lat.] A divine; one studious of the science of divinity.
The cardinals of Rome, which are theologians, friars, and schoolmen, call all temporal business, of wars, embassages, flattery, which is under their jurisdiction. Bacon's Essays.
A theologian more by need than genial bent;
Intrest in all his actions was discern'd. Dryden.
It is no more an order, according to popish theologians, than the prima tonsura, they allowing only seven ecclesiastical theologians. Ayliffe's Parergon.
THEOLOGY. n. f. [theologie, Fr. théologie.] Divinity.
The whole drift of the scripture of God, what is it but only to teach theology? Theology, what is it but the science of things divine? Hooker, b. iii.
She was most dear to the king in regard of her knowledge in languages, in theology, and in philosophy. Hayward.
The oldest writers of theology were of this mind. Tillotson.
THEOMACHIST. n. f. He who fights against the gods. Bailey.
THEOMACHY. n. f. [theomachia, Fr. théomachie.] The fight against the gods by the giants. Bailey.
THEORNO. n. f. [theorba, Italian; theorbe, Fr.] A large lute for playing a thorough bass, used by the Italians. Bailey.
He wanted nothing but a fong,
And a well tun'd theorbo hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd, with a strain. Entler.
THEOREM. n. f. [theorema, Fr. théorème.] A position laid down as an acknowledged truth.
Having found this the head theorem of all their discourses, who plead for the change of ecclesiastical government in England, we hold it necessary that the proofs thereof be weighed. Hooker, b. ii.
The chief points of morality are no less demonstrable than mathematics; nor is the subtilty greater in moral theorems than in mathematical. More's divine Dialogues.
Many observations go to the making up of one theorem, which, like oaks fit for durable buildings, must be of many years growth. Grant.
Here are three theorems, that from thence we may draw some conclusions. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
THEOREMATICAL. adj. [from theorem.] Comprised in theorems; consisting in theorems.
THEOREMICK. adj. [from theorem.] Theoretical truth, or that which lies in the conceptions we have of things, is negative or positive. Gray.
THEORETICAL. adj. [theoretique, French;] Speculative;
[from theoria.] depending THEORICAL. adj. [theoretique, Fr. from] depending [from theoria.] depending THEORICK. adj. [theoretique, Fr. from] depending [from theoria.] depending
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears;
To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences:
So that the act and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorie. Shakespeare.
The theoretical part of the inquiry being interwoven with the historical conjectures, the philosophy of colours will be promoted by indispensible experiments. Eyle on Colours.
For theoretical learning and sciences there is nothing yet complete. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
THEORICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A speculatist; one who knows only speculation, not practice.
The bookish theorick,
Wherein the toged consuls can propose
As masterly as he; meer prattle, without practice,
Is all his foldiership. Shakespeare's Othello.
THEORETICALLY. adj. [from theoretick.] Speculative.
THEORICALLY. adj. [from theoretick.] Speculative.
THEORIST. n. f. [from theory.] A speculatist; one given to speculation.
The greatest theorists have given the preference to such a form of government as that which obtains in this kingdom.
THEORY. n. f. [theorie, Fr. théorie.] Speculation; not practice; scheme; plan or system yet subsisting only in the mind.
If they had been themselves to execute their own theory in this church, they would have seen being nearer at hand.
In making gold, the means hitherto propounded to effect it are in the practice full of error, and in the theory full of unfound imagination. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 326.
Practice alone divides the world into virtuous and vicious;
but as to the theory and speculation of virtue and vice, mankind are much the same. South's Sermons.
THERAPEUTICK. adj. [θεραπευτικός.] Curative; teaching or endeavouring the cure of diseases.
Therapeutick or curative physick restoreth the patient into sanity, and taketh away diseases actually affecting. Brown.
The practice and therapeutick is distributed into the conservative, preservative, and curative. Hart.
Medicine is justly distributed into prophylactic, or the art of preserving health; and therapeutick, or the art of restoring
it. Watt.
THERE. adv. [thar, Gothick; thar, Saxon; daer, Dutch;
der, Danish.]
1. In that place.
If they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Exil'd by thee from earth to deepest hell,
In brazen bonds shall barbarous discord dwell;
Gigantick pride, pale terror, gloomy care,
And mad ambition shall attend her there. Pope.
2. It is opposed to here.
To see thee fight, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Could their reliques be as different there as they are here, yet the manna in heaven will suit every palate.
Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton.
3. An exclamation directing something at a distance.
Your fury hardens me.
A guard there; seize her. Dryden's Aureng-Zeb.
4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or there came a man.
It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.
For reformation of error there were that thought it a part of Christian charity to instruct them. Hooker.
There cannot in nature be a strength so great, as to make the least moveable to pass in an instant, or all together, through the least place. Digby on the Soul.
There have been that have delivered themselves from their ills by their good fortune or virtue. Suckling.
In human actions there are no degrees described, but a latitude is indulged.
Wherever there is sense or perception, there some idea is actually produced. Locke.
5. In composition it means that: as thereby, by that.
THEREABOUT. adv. [there and about, thereabouts is thereabouts.] fore less proper.
1. Near that place.
One speech I lov'd; 'twas Æneas's tale to Dido; and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priam's laughter. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. Nearly; near that number, quantity, or state.
Between the twelfth of king John and thirty-sixth of king Edward the third, containing one hundred and fifty years or thereabouts, there was a continual bordering war. Davies.
Find a house to lodge a hundred and fifty persons, whereof twenty or thereabout may be attendants. Milton.

Some three months since, or thereabout, Shakespeare.
She found me out. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Water is thirteen times rarer, and its resistance less than that of quicksilver thereabouts, as I have found by experiments with pendulums. Newton's Opticks.
3. Concerning that matter. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
As they were much perplexed thereabout, two men stood
by. Luke xxiv. 4.
THEREAFTER. adv. [there and after.] According to that;
accordingly.
When you can draw the head indifferent well, proportion the body thereafter. Peacham.
If food were now before thee set, Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Wouldst thou not eat it thereafter as I like Milton.
THEREAT. adv. [there and at.]
1. As that; on that account. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature; for which cause it bluntheth thereat, but glorieth in the contrary. Hooker.
2. At that place. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many go in thereat. Mat. vii. 13.
THEREBY. adv. [there and by.] By that; by means of that;
in consequence of that. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Some parts of our liturgy consist in the reading of the word of God, and the proclaiming of his law, that the people may thereby learn what their duties are towards him. Hooker.
There with at last he forc'd him to untie
One of his grasping feet, him to defend thereby. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Being come to the height, they were thereby brought to an absolute necessity. Davies on Ireland.
Dare to be true; nothing can need a lie.
A fault, which needs it most, grows two thereby. Herbert.
If the paper be placed beyond the focus, and then the red colour at the lens be alternately intercepted and let pass, the violet on the paper will not suffer any change thereby. Newton.
THEREFORE. adv. [there and fore.]
1. For that; for this; for this reason; in consequence.
This is the latest parley we will admit;
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Faithful is dead,
And we must yern thereby. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Therefore shall a man leave father and mother and cleave to his wife. Gen. ii. 24.
The herd that seeks after sensual pleasure is soft and unmanly; and therefore I compose myself to meet a storm. Lucas.
He bluntheth; therefore he is guilty.
The wretches sprinkled dust on their bodies to give better hold: the glory therefore was greater to conquer without powder. West's Pindar.
2. In return for this; in recompence for this or for that.
We have forsaken all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore? Mat. xix. 27.
THEREFROM. adv. [there and from.] From that; from this.
Be ye therefore very courageous to do all that is written in the law, that ye turn not aside therefrom, to the right hand or to the left. Isa. xlii. 6.
The leaves that spring therefrom grow white. Martimer.
THEREIN. adv. [there and in.] In that; in this.
Therein our letters do not well agree. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
The matter is of that nature, that I find myself unable to serve you therein as you desire. Bacon.
All the earth is therein. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
To thee, and to thy race, I give: as lords it smelt Possess it, and all things that therein live. Milton.
After having well examined them, we shall therein find many charms. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
THEREINTO. adv. [there and into.] Into that.
Let not them that are in the countries enter therein. Luke.
Though we shall have occasion to speak of this, we will now make some entrance therein. Bacon.
THEREOF. adv. [there and of.] Of that; of this.
Considering how the case doth stand with this present age, full of tongue and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker, b. i.
Tis vain to think that lasting which must end;
And when 'tis past, not any part remains Thereof, but the reward which virtue gains. Denham.
I shall begin with Greece, where my observations shall be confined to Athens, though several instances might be brought from other states thereof. Swift.
THEREON. adv. [there and on.] On that.
You shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said; and when he thought thereon he wept. Mark xiv. 72.
Its foundation is laid thereon. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iv.
THEREOUT. adv. [there and out.] Out of that.
Thereout a strange beast with seven heads arose,
That towns and castles under her breast did cour. Spenser.

THERETO. adv. [there and to, or onto.] To that.
THEREUNTO. adv. [there and to, or onto.] To that.
Is it in regard then of sermons only, that apprehending the gospel of Christ we yield thereunto our unfeigned assent as to a thing infallibly true. Hooker, b. v.
This sort of base people doth not for the most part rebel of themselves, having no heart thereunto, but are by force drawn by the grand rebels into their action. Spenser on Ireland.
Next thereunto did grow a goodly tree. Fairy Queen.
That whereby we reason, live and be Within ourselves we strangers are thereby. Davies.
A larger form of speech were safer than that which punc-

What might his force have done, being brought thereto,
When that already gave so much to do? Daniel.
That it is the appointment of God, might be argument enough to persuade us thereunto. Tillotson's Sermons.
THEREUPON. adv. [there and upon.]
1. Upon that; in consequence of that.
Grace having not in one thing shewed itself, nor for some few days, but in such sort so long continued, our manifold sins striving to the contrary, what can we less thereupon conclude, than that God would at least-wise, by tract of time, teach the world, that the thing which he blesteth cannot but be of him. Hooker, b. iv.
He hopes to find you forward
And thereupon he sends you this good news. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Let that one article rank with the rest.
And thereupon give me your daughter. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Though grants of extraordinary liberties made by a king to his subjects do no more diminish his greatness than when one torch lighteth another, yet many times inconveniences do arise thereupon. Davies on Ireland.
Children are chid for having failed in good manners, and have thereupon reproofs and precepts heaped upon them. Locke.
Solon finding the people engaged in two violent factions, of the poor and the rich, and in great confusion thereupon,
made due provisions for settling the balance of power. Swift.
2. Immediately.
THEREUNDER. adv. [there and under.] Under that.
Those which come nearer unto reason, find paradise under the equinoctial line, judging that thereunder might be found most pleasure and the greatest fertility. Raleigh.
THEREWITH. adv. [there and with.]
1. With that.
Germany had stricken off that which appeared corrupt in the doctrine of the church of Rome, but seemed in discipline still to retain therewith very great conformity. Hooker, b. iv.
All things without, which round about we see,
We seek to know, and have therewith to do. Davies.
There with at last he forc'd him to untie
One of his grasping feet, him to defend thereby. Spenser.
2. Immediately.
THEREWITHAL. adv. [there and withal.]
1. Over and above.
There withal the execrable act
On their late murder'd king they aggravate. Daniel.
2. At the same time.
Well, give her that ring, and give therewithal
That letter. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.
3. With that.
His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewithal enwrapt the nimble thighs
Of his froth-foamy steed. Spenser.
THERIACAL. adj. [θεριακός; from theriaca, Lat.] Medicinal; physical.
The virtuous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains, where there are theriacal herbs. Bacon.
THERMOMETER. n. f. [thermometre, Fr. thermomètre and mètre.]
An instrument for measuring the heat of the air, or of any matter.
The greatest heat is about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, as is evident from the thermometer, or observations of the weather-glass. Brown.
THERMOMETRICAL. adj. [from thermometer.] Relating to the measure of heat.
His heat raises the liquor in the thermometrical tubes. Cheyne.
THERMOSCOPE. n. f. [thermoscope, Fr. thermoscope and σκοπεω.]
An instrument by which the degrees of heat are discovered;
a thermometer.
By the trial of the thermoscope, fishes have more heat than the element which they swim in. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
THESE, pronoun, the plural of this.
1. Opposed to those.
Did we for these barbarians plant and sow
On these, on these our happy fields below? Dryden.
2. These relates to the persons or things last mentioned; and those to the first.
More rain falls in June and July than in December and January; but it makes a much greater show upon the earth in these months than in those, because it lies longer upon it.

For well yee worthy been for worth and gentle thewes.

From mother's pap I taken was unfit,
And freight deliver'd to a fairy knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thewes and martial might.

In Shakespeare it seems to signify brawn, or bulk, from the Saxon théow, the thigb, or some such meaning.

Nature crescent does not grow alone
In théow and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal.

Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to chuse a man?
Care I for the limbs, the thewes, the stature, bulk and big semblance of a man? give me the spirit, master Shallow.

THE'WED. adj. [from théw.] Educated; habituated; accustomed.

But he was wife and wary of her will,
And ever held his hand upon his heart;
Yet would not seem to rude, and théwed in ill.

As to despise so courteous seeming part.
THEY. n. f. in the oblique case them, the plural of he or she. [thé, Saxon.]

1. The men; the women; the persons.
They are in a most warlike preparation.

Why do you keep alone?
Of forriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on.

The Spaniard
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble.

They eat on beds of silk and gold,
At ivory tables, or wood fold
Dearer than it.

To joy the friend and grapple with the foe.
2. Those men; those women: opposed to some others.

Only they,
That come to hear a merry play,
Will be deceived.

'Tis remarkable, that they Talk most who have the least to say.

There, as they say, perpetual night is found
In silence brooding on th' unhappy ground.

TH'ILE. n. f. A slice; a summer; a spatula.

5. To grow quick.

The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward when the show'ry kids arise,
Or parting hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain.

THICKET. n. f. [thicket, Saxon.] A close knot or tuft of trees; a close wood or copse.

I drew you hither,
Into the chieftest thicket of the park.

Within a thicket I repos'd; and found
Let fall from heav'n a sleep interminate.

Chus, or any of his, could not in haste creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest.

How often, from the sleep
Of echoing hills, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator?

My brothers slept to the next thicket side
To bring me berries.

Now Leda's twins
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe;
Nor had they mis'd, but he to thickets fled,
Conceal'd from aiming spears, not puerous to the speed.

I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tyger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts.

THICKLY. adv. [from thick.] Deeply; to a great quantity.

Mending cracked receivers, having thickly overlaid them with diachylon, we could not perceive leaks.

THICKNESS. n. f. [from thick.]

1. The state of being thick; density.

2. Quantity of matter interposed; space taken up by matter interposed.

In the darkened room, against the hole at which the light entered, I could easily see through the whole thickness of my hand the motions of a body placed beyond it.

tween the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure.

THICK-SCULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.

Pleas'd to hear their thick-scull'd judges cry,
Well mov'd! oh finely said!

This downright fighting fool, this thick-scull'd hero,
This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue has outgone my wit.

THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.

His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shoots up a thicket thorny wood;
His bristled back a trench impal'd appears,
And stands erect, like a field of spears.

The truth is so thickset with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern.

THICKSKIN. n. f. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numskull.

The shallow'st thickskin of that barren fort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene and enter'd in a brake.

THIEF. n. f. [thiefs, Gothic; thief, Saxon; thief, Dutch.

It was anciently written thiefs, and so appeareth to have been of two syllables; thie was wont to be taken for thiefs, so that thie is he that takes of or from a man his thief, that is, his thrift or means whereby he thrives.]

1. One who takes what belongs to another: the thief steals by frettery, and the robber by violence; but these senses are confounded.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night.

This he said because he was a thief, and had the bag.

Can you think I owe a thief my life,

And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend.

To THIEVE. v. n. [from thief.] To steal; to practise theft.

THIEVERY. n. f. [from thieve.]

1. The practice of stealing.

Ne how to scape great punishment and shame,
For their false treason and vile thievery.

Master, be one of them; 'tis an honourable kind of thievery.

Do villainy, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery.

He makes it a help unto thievery; for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast therein the fragments of loadstone, which raiseth fume.

Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest.

2. That which is stolen.

Injurious time now, with a robber's hafte,
Crans his rich thievery up he knows not how.

THIEVISH. adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.

What, would'st thou have me go and beg my food?
Or with a bafe and boist'rous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars;
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the milled and lonely traveller?

The thievish God suspected him, and took
The hind aside, and thus in whispers spake;
Discover not the theft.

2. Secret; sly.

Four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass.

THIEVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.] Like a thief.

habit of stealing.

THIGH. n. f. [théow, Saxon; thies, Islandick; thie, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee.

The thigh bone is the longest of all the bones in the body:
its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle: it is a little convex and round on its forehead, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its backside.

He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint.

The flesh dissolved, and left the thigh bone bare.

THILK. pronoun. [thilc, Saxon.] That same. Obsolete.

I love thilk lass: alas, why do I love!
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove,
And of my rural musick holdeth scorn.

THILL. n. f. [thille, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.] The shafts of a waggon; the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis.

THILL-HORSE. n. f. [thill and horse.] The last horse; the thiller.

With collars and harness for thiller and al.

What a beard hast thou got? thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill horse has on his tail.

THIMBLE. n. f. [This is supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from thumb bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,
Their needles to lances.

Examine Venus and the Moon,
Who stole a thimble or a spoon.

Veins that run perpendicular to the horizon, have valves sticking to their sides like so many thimbles; which, when the blood presses back, stop its passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood.

Of our well-meaning, frugal ancestors. Reformen.
Thou art weak, and full of art is he;
Else how could he that host seduce to sin?

Whose fall has left the heavenly nation thin? Dryden.
Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields,
The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields. Dryden.

Thin on the tow'rs they stand; and ev'n those few,
A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew. Dryden.
Already Caesar
Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.

Seven thin ears blasted with the east wind sprung up. Gen.
4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest
Thin down with ought of profit or delight. Milton.
Thin leaved arbute hazle-graffs receives,
And planes huge apples bear that bore but leaves. Dryden.

5. Exile; small.
I hear the groans of ghosts;
Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams. Dryden.
6. Not coarse; not gross in substance.

Fertile is very large, but extremely thin of people. Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.
A slim thin gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost, and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again. L'Estrange.

THIN. adv. Not thickly.
Fame is the spur, that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred sheers,
And fits the thin span life. Milton.

A country gentleman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin clad. Locke.
To THIN. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; not to thicken.
The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little. Arbutnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.
The bill against root and branch never passed till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overawed. King Charles.

THINK. n. f. [Sinn, Saxon; ding, Dutch.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.
Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.
— You have a thing for me?
It is a common thing—
Ha?

— To have a foolish wife. Shakspeare. Othello.
The great matter he found busy in packing up his things against his departure. Kaolles's Hist. of the Turks.
The remnant of the meat-offering is a thing most holy. Levi. ii. 3.

Says the master, you devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. Levi. ii. 3.
A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dryden.
I should blush to own so rude a thing,
As it is to shun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Tillotson.
2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun above twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four shilling volume. Swift.
3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object?
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congr.
The poor thing sigh'd, and with a blessing express'd with the utmost vehemence turned from me. Addison.
I'll be this abject thing no more.

Love give me back my heart again. Granville.
4. It is used by Shakspeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath: but that I see thee here, Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart. Shakspeare.
To THINK. v. n. preter. thought. [thantgon, Gothick; dencean, Saxon; dencken, Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active; where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
I know, because I think; but whence I came,
Or how this frame of mine began to be,
What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on. Locke.
It is an opinion that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body. Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon.
His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addison's Freeholder.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.
Let them marry to whom they think best; only to their father's tribe shall they marry. Numb. xxxvi. 6.
I fear we shall not find
This long desired king such as was thought. Daniel.

3. To intend.
Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that wish him live. Shakspeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.
Something since his coming forth is thought of, which imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most requir'd. Shakspeare. King Lear.

In pity of his misery, to dispatch
Edmund, I think, is gone. Shakspeare. King Lear.
His nighted life.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Spectator, No. 477.

5. To muse; to meditate.
You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh. Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.
We are come to have the warrant. Shakspeare.
— Well thought upon; I have it here about me. Shakspeare.

He shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thriffling sons their scraping fathers gold. Shakespeare.
THRIFTY, adj. [from thrift.]
1. Frugal; sparing; not profuse; not lavish.
Though some men do, as do they would,
Let thrifty do, as do they should. Tusser.
Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But like a thrifty goddess she determines Herself the glory of a creditor,
Thanks and use. Shakespeare.
Left he should neglect his studies
Like a young heir, the thrifty goddess,
For fear young matter should be spoilt,
Would use him like a younger child.
I am glad he has so much youth and vigour left, of which he hath not been thrifty; but wonder he has no more discretion.
2. Well-husbanded.
I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I laid under your father. Shakespeare.
TO THRILL, v. a. [Gyphian, Saxon; drilla, Swedish.] To pierce; to bore; to penetrate; to drill.
The cruel word her tender heart to thrill'd,
That sudden cold did run through every vein,
And formy horror all her senses fill'd
With dying fit, that down she fell for pain. Fairy Qu.
He pierced through his chafed chest
With thrilling point of deadly iron brand,
And lanc'd his lordly heart. Fairy Qu. b. i.
A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act; bending his sword
To his great master. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Nature, that heard such sound,
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's seat, the airy region thrilling,
Now was almost won,
To think her part was done. Milton.
TO THRILL, v. n.
1. To have the quality of piercing.
The knight his thrilling spear again assay'd,
In his brail-plated body to embolden. Fairy Qu. b. i.
With that, one of his thrilling darts he threw,
Headed with ire and vengeable despite. Fairy Qu. b. ii.
2. To pierce or wound the ear with a sharp sound.
The piteous maiden, careful, comfortless,
Does throw out thrilling thrills, and shrieking cries. Fairy Queen, b. i.
3. To feel a sharp tingling sensation.
To seek sweet safety out,
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill and shake,
Ev'n at the crying of our nation's crow,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman. Shakespeare.
Art thou not horribly afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it? Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. i.
4. To pass with a tingling sensation.
A faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakespeare.
A sudden horror chill
Ran through each nerve, and thrill'd in ev'ry vein. Addison.
TO THRIVE, v. n. pret. throve, and sometimes less properly thrived, part. thriven. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory etymology: in the northern dialect they use thadden, to make grow; perhaps throve was the original word, from thrao, Ilandick, to encrease.] To prosper; to grow rich; to advance in any thing desired.
He came forth with his clowns horst on poor cart-jades, and so furnished, that if this be thrift, I with my subjects never thrive. Shakespeare.
The better thou thrivesst, the gladder am I. Tusser.
If lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us. Shakespeare.
It grew amongst bushes, where commonly plants do not thrive. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 620.
They by vices thrive,
Sail on smooth seas, and at their port arrive. Sandys.
O son! why sit we here, each other viewing
Idly, while Satan, our great author, thrives
In other worlds, and happier feat provides For us, his offspring dear? Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Those who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, seldom embark all their hopes in one bottom. Decay of Piety.
A careful shepherd not only turns his flock into a common pasture, but with particular advenience observes the thriving of every one. Decay of Piety.
Growth is of the very nature of some things: to be and to thrive is all one with them; and they know no middle season between their spring and their fall. South's Sermon.
Experience'd age in deep despair was lost,
To see the rebel thrive, the loyal crost. Dryden.
Seldom a thriving man turns his land into money to make the greater advantage. Locke.

The thriven calves in meads their food forsake,
And render their sweet souls before the piteous rack. Dryden's Virgil.
A little hope—but I have none.
On air the poor camellions thrive,
Deny'd ev'n that my love can live. Graville.
Such a care hath always been taken of the city charities, that they have thriven and prospered gradually from their infancy, down to this very day. Atterbury's Sermons.
In the fat age of pleasure, wealth and ease,
Sprung the rank weed, and thriv'd with large increase. Pease's Essay on Criticism.
Diligence and humility is the way to thrive in the riches of the understanding, as well as in gold. Watts's Logic.
THRIVER, n. f. [from thrive.] One that prospers; one that grows rich.
He had so well improved that little stock his father left, as he was like to prove a thriver in the end. Hayward.
THRIVELY, adv. [from thriving.] In a prosperous way.
THRO, contracted by barbarians from through.
What thanks can wretched fugitives return,
Who scatter'd thry the world in exile mourn. Dryden.
THROAT, n. f. [Sporo, Spora, Saxon.]
1. The forepart of the neck; the passages of nutriment and breath.
The gold, I give thee, will I melt and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakespeare.
Wherefore could I not pronounce, amen?
I had most need of blessing, and amen
Stuck in my throat. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. The main road of any place.
Her honour, and her courage try'd,
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field. Thomson.
3. To cut the THROAT. To murder; to kill by violence.
These bred up amongst the Englishmen, when they become kern, are made more fit to cut their throats. Spenser.
A trumpeter that was made prisoner, when the soldiers were about to cut his throat, says, why should you kill a man that kills nobody? LeStrange.
THROATPIPE, n. f. [throat and pipe.] The weapon; the windpipe.
THROATWORT, n. f. [throat and wort.] A plant.
The throatwort hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, and cut into several parts at the top, whose empla-ment becomes a membranaceous fruit, often triangular, and divided into three cells, full of small seeds. Miller.
TO THROB, v. n. [from throbb, Minshew and Junius; formed in imitation of the sound, Skinner; perhaps contracted from throu up.]
1. To heave; to beat; to rise as the breast with sorrow or distress.
Here may his head live on my throbbing breast. Shakespeare.
My heart throbs to know one thing:
Shall Banquo's issue ever reign? Shakespeare. Macbeth.
'Twas the clasp of swords: my troubled heart
Is so cast down, and sunk amidst its sorrows,
It throbs with fear, and akes at every found. Addison.
How that warm'd me! How my throbbing heart
Leapt to the image of my father's joy,
When you shou'd strain me in your folding arms. Smith.
2. To beat; to palpitate.
In the depending orifice there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism, the blood being choaked in by the contracted flesh. Wise's Surgery.
THROB, n. f. [from the verb.] Heave; beat; stroke of palpitation.
She sigh'd from bottom of her wounded breast,
And after many bitter throbs did throw,
With lips full pale, and fault'ring tongue oppress'd. Fa. Qu.
Thou talk'st like one who never felt
Th' impatient throbs and longings of a soul,
That pants and reaches after distant good. Addison's Cato.
THROE, n. f. [from thropian, to suffer, Saxon.]
1. The pain of travail; the anguish of bringing children: it is likewise written throu.
Lucina lent not me her bed,
But took me in my throes. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
My womb pregnant, and now excessive grown,
Prodigious motion felt and useful throes. Milton.
Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pains,
My throes come thicker and my cries increas'd. Dryden.
Reflect on that day, when earth shall be again in travail with her sons, and at one fruitful throe bring forth all the generations of learned and unlearned, noble and ignoble duft. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Any extreme agony; the final and mortal struggle.
O man! have mind of that most bitter throe,
For as the tree does fall so lies it ever low. Fairy Qu.
To ease them of their griefs,

THRONE, n. f. [thronus, Lat. Spav.] A royal seat; the seat of a king.
1. A royal seat; the seat of a king.
Boundless intemperance hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And full of many kings. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Th' eternal father from his throne beheld
Their multitude. Milton.
Stonehenge once thought a temple, you have found
A throne where kings were crown'd. Dryden.
2. The seat of a bishop.
In those times the bishops preached on the steps of the altar standing, having not as yet assumed the state of a throne.
altar standing, having not as yet assumed the state of a throne.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
TO THRONE, v. a. [from the noun.] To enthron; to set on a royal seat.
They have, as who have not, whom their great stars
Thron'd and set high?
True image of the father, whether thron'd
In the bosom of bliss and light of light,
Conceiving or remote from heav'n, enshrin'd
Inlessly tabernacle and human form. Milton.
O prince! O chief of many throned powers. Milton.
Thron'd in glass and nam'd it Caroline. Pease.
THRONG, n. f. [throng, Saxon, from thungan, to press.] A crowd; a multitude pressing against each other.
Let us on heaps go offer up our lives:
We are enow yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our throngs. Shakespeare.
A throng
Of thick short fobs in thund'ring volleys float,
And roll themselves over her lubrick throat
In panting murmurs. Crashaw.
This book, the image of his mind,
Will make his name not hard to find.
I with the throng of great and good
Made it less easily understood. Waller.
With studious thought observ'd th' illustrious throng,
In nature's order as they pass'd along;
Their names, their fates. Dryden's En.
TO THROG, v. n. [from the noun.] To crowd; to come in tumultuous multitudes.
I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
His mother could not longer bear the agitations of so many passions as throng'd upon her, but fell upon his neck, crying out, my son. Tatler, N. 55.
TO THROG, v. a. To oppress or incommode with crowds or tumults.
I'll say, thou hast gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd too shortly. Shakespeare.
The multitude throng thee and press thee. Luke viii. 45.
All access was throng'd, the gates Thick swarm'd. Milton.
THROSTLE, n. f. [throstele, Saxon.] The thrush; a small singing bird.
The throstle with his note so true,
The wren with little quill. Shakespeare.
The black-bird and throstle with their melodious voices bid welcome to the cheerful spring. Walter's Angler.

lify the found. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO THROTTLE, v. a. [from the noun.] To choke; to suf-focate; to kill by stopping the breath.
I have seen them thrive and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accents in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off. Shakespeare.
As when Antæus in Iralia strove
With Jove's Alcides, and oft foil'd still rose,
Receiving from his mother earth new strength,
Fresh from his fall and fiercer grapple join'd,
Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.
His throat half thrott'd with corrupted phlegm,
And breathing through his jaws a belching steam. Dryden.
The throbbing quintessence of my far appointments,
And thenceforth I tend to rack the joints.
Throttle thyself with an ell of strong tape,
For thou hast not a groat to atone for a rape. Swift.
THROVE, the preterite of thrive.
England never throve so well, nor was there ever brought into England so great an increase of wealth since. Locke.
THROUGH, prep. [thruh, Saxon; door, Dutch; durch, German.]

From heav'n, they fabled, thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements.
Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sullage behind.
Aristo, in his voyage of Adolpho to the moon, has a fine allegory of two swans, who, when time had thrown the writings of many poets into the river of oblivion, were ever in a readiness to secure the best, and bear them aloft into the temple of immortality.
When Ajax drives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow.
The air-pump, barometer, and quadrant, were thrown out to those busy spirits, as tubs and barrels are to a whale, that he may let the ship fall on while he diverts himself with those innocent amusements.
2. To toss; to put with any violence or tumult. It always comprises the idea of haste, force or negligence.
To threats the stubborn sinner oft is hard,
Wrap'd in his crimes against the storm prepar'd;
But when the milder beams of mercy play,
He melts, and throws his cumbrous cloak away.
The only means for bringing France to our conditions, is to throw in multitudes upon them, and overpower them with numbers.
Labour casts the humours into their proper channels, throws off redundancies, and helps nature.
Make room for merit, by throwing down the worthless and depraved part of mankind from those conspicuous stations to which they have been advanced.
The island Inarime contains, within the compass of eighteen miles, a wonderful variety of hills, vales, rocks, fruitful plains, and barren mountains, all thrown together in a most romantick confusion.
3. To lay carelessly, or in haste.
His majesty departed to his chamber, and threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and abundance of tears, the loss of an excellent servant.
At th' approach of night,
On the first friendly bank he throws him down,
Or rests his head upon a rock till morn.
4. To venture at dice.
Learn more than thou trowest,
Set less than thou throwst.
5. To cast; to strip off.
There the snake throws the enamell'd skin.
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in.
6. To omit in any manner.
To arms; for I have thrown
A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth.
One of the Greek orators antagonists reading over the oration that procured his banishment, and seeing his friends admire it, asked them, if they were so much affected by the bare reading, how much more they would have been alarmed if they had heard him actually throwing out such a storm of eloquence.
There is no need to throw words of contempt on such a practice; the very description of it carries reproach.
7. To spread in haste.
O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw,
And illu'd like a god to mortal view.
8. To overturn in wrestling.
If the sinner shall not only wrestle with this angel, but throw him too, and win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all these considerations shall be able to strike no terror into his mind, he is too strong for grace.
9. To drive; to send by force.
Myself distressed, an exile and unknown,
Debar'd from Europe, and from Asia thrown,
In Libyan deserts wander thus alone.
When seamen are thrown upon any unknown coast in America, they never venture upon the fruit of any tree, unless they observe it marked with the pecking of birds.
Poor youth! how canst thou throw him from thee?
Lucia, thou know'st not half the love he bears thee.
10. To make to act at a distance.
Throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard.
11. To repose.

13. To turn. [turnare, Lat.]
14. To throw away. To lose; to spend in vain.
He warms 'em to avoid the courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves.
In vain on study time away we throw,
When we forbear to act the things we know.
A man had better throw away his care upon any thing else than upon a garden on wet or moist ground.
Had we but lasting youth and time to spare,
Some might be thrown away on fame and war.
He sigh'd, breath'd short, and wou'd have spoke,
But was too fierce to throw away the time.
The next in place and punishment are they
Who prodigally throw their souls away;
Fools who, repining at their wretched state,
And loathing anxious life, suborn'd their fate.
In poetry the expression beautifies the design; if it be vicious or unpleasing, the cost of colouring is thrown away upon it.
The well-meaning man should rather consider what opportunities he has of doing good to his country, than throw away his time in deciding the rights of princes.
She threw away her money upon roaring bullies, that went about the streets.
15. To throw away. To reject.
He that will throw away a good book because it is not gilded, is more curious to please his eye than understanding.
16. To throw by. To reject; to lay aside as of no use.
Like one of Juno's disguises; and,
When things succeed, be thrown by, or let fall.
He that begins to have any doubt of his tenets, received without examination, ought, in reference to that question, to throw wholly by all his former notions.
17. To throw down. To subvert; to overturn.
Must one rash word, th' infirmity of age,
Throw down the merit of my better years?
This the reward of a whole life of service?
18. To throw off. To expel.
The salts and oils in the animal body, as soon as they putrefy, are thrown off, or produce mortal distempers.
19. To throw off. To reject; to renounce; as, to throw off an acquaintance.
'Twould be better
Cou'd you provoke him to give you th' occasion,
And then to throw him off.
Can there be any reason why the household of God alone should throw off all that orderly dependence and duty, by which all other houses are best governed?
20. To throw out. To exert; to bring forth into act.
She threw out thrilling shrieks and shrieking cries.
The gods in bounty work up storms about us,
That give mankind occasion to exert
Their hidden strength, and throw out into practice
Virtues which than the day
21. To throw out. To distance; to leave behind.
When e'er did Juba, or did Portius, show
A virtue that has cast me at a distance,
And thrown me out in the pursuits of honour?

- He heard a stone, and rising to the throw
He sent it in a whirlwind at the foe;
A rowl affluited by so rude a stroke,
With all its lofty battlements had shook.
2. A cast of dice; the manner in which the dice fall when they are cast.
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page.
If they err finally, it is like a man's missing his cast when he throws dice for his life; his being, his happiness, and all, is involved in the error of one throw.
Suppose any particular order of the alphabet to be assigned, and the twenty-four letters cast at a venture, so as to fall in a line; it is many million of millions odds to one against any single throw, that the assigned order will not be cast.
3. The space to which any thing is thrown.
I have ever narrated my friends,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing.
The Sirenum Scylli are two or three sharp rocks that stand about a stone's throw from the fourth side of the island.
4. Stroke; blow.
So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold,
No shield defend the thunder of his throws.
5. Effort; violent fall.
Your youth admires
The throws and swellings of a Roman foul;
Cato's bold fights, the extravagance of virtue.
6. The agony of childbirth: in this sense it is written throe.
See THROE.
The most pregnant wit in the world never brings forth any thing great without some pain and travail, pangs and throws before the delivery.
But when the mother's throws begin to come,
The creature, pent within the narrow room,
Breaks his blind prison.
Say, my friendship wants him
To help me bring to light a manly birth;
Which to the wand'ring world I shall disclose;
Or if he fail me, perish in my throws.
THROWER. n. f. [from throw.] One that throws.
Antigonus,
Since fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower out
Of my poor babe;

 which should pay every man according to his captain's tickets,
 and the account of the clerk of his band.* Spenser.
In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks. Collier on Every.
*Let fops or fortune fly which way they will,
 Disdains all loss of tickets or codille.* Pope.
TO TYCKLE. v. a. [titillo, Lat.]
 1. To affect with a purient sensation by slight touches.
*Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
 Can tickle where the wounds.* Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body. Bacon.
There is a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will. Dryden.
It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden.
 2. To please by slight gratifications.
Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden eloquence, being withal tickled by Mutidorus's praises, had his brain so tuned, that he became slave to that which he that sued to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney.
*Expectation tickling skittish spirits
 Sets all on hazard.* Shakspeare.
*Such a nature
 Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
 Which it treads on at noon.* Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
*I cannot rule my spleen;
 My scorn rebels, and tickles me within.* Dryden.
*Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd
 To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd.* Dryden.
A drunkard, the habitual thirst after his cups, drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke.
TO TYCKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.
*He with secret joy therefore Did tickle inwardly in every vein,
 And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,
 Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to obtain.* Spenser.
TICKLE.

TID

TICKLE, adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.] Tottering; unfix'd; unstable; easily overthrown.

When the last O'Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dunganon, was set up to beard him.

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may light it off.

The state of Normandy.

Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone.

TICKLISH, adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched.

2. Tottering; uncertain; unfix'd.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive distempers and mutations than England was.

Did it stand upon ticklish and tottering a foundation as some mens fancy hath placed it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary.

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,

Who dares most impudently not translate;

It had been civil in their ticklish times,

To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes.

TICKLISHNESS, n. f. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

TICKTACK, n. f. [trick-tack, Fr.] A game at tables.

TID, adj. [tybden, Saxon.] Tender; soft; nice.

To TIDDLE, v. a. [from tid.] To use tenderly; to fondle.

To TIDDER, v. a. [from tid.] To use tenderly; to fondle.

TIDE, n. f. [tyd, Saxon; tijd, Dutch and Islandick.]

1. Time; season; while.

There they alight in hope themselves to hide

From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide.

They two forth passing,

Received those two fair brides, their love's delight,

Which, at the appointed tide,

Each one did make his bride.

What hath this day deferr'd,

That it in golden letter should be set,

Among the high tides in the calendar.

At New-year's tide following the king chose him master of the horse.

2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the Moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the Moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water, in the great ocean following the motion of the Moon from East to West, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebounds back again, and so makes floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers.

3. Flood.

As in the tides of people once up there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,

That ever lived in the tide of times.

The rapid currents drive

Towards the retreating sea their furious tide.

But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,

And pays the sea in tributary tides,

Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,

Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest.

Continual tide

Flows from th' exhilarating fount.

To TIDE, v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,

Torn from the naked poop, are tid'd back

By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore.

To TIDE, v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

When, from his dint, the foe still backward thrunk,

Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,

And sent them, rolling, to the tid'd Humber.

To TIDE, n. f. [tide and gate.] A gate through which the tide passes into a baion.

To TIDE, n. f. [tide and man.] A tidewater or custom-house officer, who watches on board of merchant ships till the duty of goods be paid and the ships unloaded.

To TIDE, n. f. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.

Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and tidewater places.

To TIDLY, adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.

To TIDINESS, n. f. [from tidy.] Neatness; readiness.

TIE

TIDINGS, n. f. [taban, Saxon; to beþian, to beþide, to beþiden, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,

And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,

She fell to ground for sorrowful regret.

I shall make my master glad with these tidings.

Great numbers of each nation to receive,

With joy, the tidings brought from heaven.

Fortius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance:

What tidings dost thou bring? methinks I see

Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes.

The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was propoed and ratified, was the eternal son of his bosom.

To TIE, v. a. [tied, Islandick.]

1. Seasonable.

If weather be faire and tide, thy grain

Make speedie carriage, for feare of a raine.

2. Neat; ready.

Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,

Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake for tidy.

Thou whorlson tidy Bartholomew bear pigs, when wilt thou leave fighting.

To TIE, v. a. [tjan, tjan, Saxon.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.

Tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their hories.

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it.

3. To hold; to fasten.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,

Together serv'd they, and together died.

The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles.

4. To hinder; to obstruct.

Death that hath ta'n her hence to make me wail,

Ties up my tongue and will not let me speak.

Melantius stay,

You have my promise, and my halcy word

Restraints my tongue, but ties not up my sword.

Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands; but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only instincts.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us, touching a pre-script form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers.

It is the cowardly terror of his spirit,

That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs,

Which tie him to an answer.

Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him.

They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find

Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind.

No one seems less tied up to a form of words.

The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy task; use will give it facility.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use.

6. It may be observed of ties, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical.

To TIE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening.

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect.

No forest, cave, or savage den,

Holds more pernicious beasts than men;

Vows, oaths, and contracts, they devise,

And tell us they are sacred ties.

TIL

'Tis not the coarser tie of human law

That binds their peace, but harmony itself

Attuning all their passions into love.

To TIER, n. f. [tiere, tierce, old Fr. tier, Dutch.] A row; a rank.

Fornovius, in his choler, discharged a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them.

To TIERCE, n. f. [tiers, tierce, Fr.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe.

Go now deny his tierce.

Wit, like tierce claret, when't begins to pall,

Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;

But in its full perfection of decay

Turns vinegar, and comes again in play.

To TIERCE, n. f. [from tiers, Fr.] A triplet; three lines.

To TIER, n. f. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]

1. Liquor; drink.

1. whom gripping penury furrows,

And hunger, sure attendant upon want,

With scanty offals, and small acid tiff,

Wretched repast! my meagre corps sustain.

2. A fit of peevishness or fullness; a pet.

To TIER, v. n. To be in a pet; to quarrel.

To TIER, n. f. [tiffer, to dress up, old Fr. Skimmer.] Very thin silk.

The smock of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten ruffians.

To TIER, n. f. [in architecture.] The shaft of a column from the atragal to the capital.

To TIER, n. f. [tigris, Fr. tigris, Latin.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.

When the blast of war blows in your ear,

Then imitate the action of the tiger:

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,

The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;

Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves

Shall never tremble.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find

The harm of unkind'd swiftness will, too late,

Tie leaden pounds to's heels.

Tigris, in the medals of Trajan, is drawn like an old man, and by his side a tiger.

Has the steer,

At whole strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,

E'er plow'd for him.

To TIGHT, adj. [dicht, Dutch.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden.

Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a fall, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in.

2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat.

A tight maid ere he for wine can ask,

Guests his meaning and unloos the flask.

The girl was a tight clever wench as any.

O Thomas, I'll make a loving wife;

I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight.

Drest her again genteel and neat,

And rather tight than great.

To TIGHTEN, v. a. [from tight.] To straiten; to make close.

To TIGHTEN, n. f. [from tighten.] A ribband or string by which women straiten their cloaths.

To TIGHTLY, adv. [from tight.]

1. Closely; not loosely.

2. Neatly; not idly.

Hold, firrah, bear you these letters tightly;

Sail, like my pinnace, to these golden shores.

Handle your pruning-knife with dexterity: tightly, I say, go tightly to your business; you have cost me much.

To TIGHTNESS, n. f. [from tight.] Closeness; not looseness.

The bones are inflexible, which arises from the greatness of the number of corpuscles that compose them, and the firmness and tightness of their union.

To TIGRESS, n. f. [from tiger.] The female of the tiger.

It is reported of the tigress, that several spots rise in her skin when she is angry.

To TIKE, n. f. [tik, Swedish; teke, Dutch; tique, Fr.]

1. The loufe of dogs or sheep. See Tick.

Lice and tikes are bred by the sweat close kept, and somewhat arch'd by the hair.

2. It is in Shakespeare the name of a dog, in which sense it is used in Scotland. [from tijk, Runick, a little dog.]

Avant, you curs!

Hound or spaniel, brache or hym,

Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail.

To TILE, n. f. [tigel, Saxon; tegel, Dutch; tuile, Fr. tegula,

TIL

Italian.] Thin plates of baked clay used to cover houses.

The roof is all tile, or lead, or stone.

Earth turned into brick serveth for building as stone doth;

and the like of tiles.

In at the window he climbs, or o'er the tiles,

Waste than all the clatt'ring tiles, and worse

Than thousand padders was the poet's curse.

Tile pins made of oak or fir they drive into holes made in the plain tiles, to hang them upon their lathing.

To TILE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with tiles.

Moss growth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

Might raise a house above two stories;

A lyric ode would slate; a catch

Would tile, an epigram would thatch.

2. To cover as tiles.

The rafters of my body, bone,

Being still with you, the muscle, sinew, and vein,

Which tile this house, will come again.

To TILER, n. f. [tullier, Fr. from tile.] One whose trade is to cover houses with tiles.

A Flemish tiler, falling from the top of a house upon a Spaniard, killed him; the next of the blood prosecuted his death; and when he was offered pecuniary recompence, nothing would serve him but lex talionis: whereupon the judge said to him, he should go up to the top of the house, and then fall down upon the tiler.

To TILING, n. f. [from tile.] The roof covered with tiles.

They went upon the house-top, and let him down through the tiling with his couch before Jesus.

To TILL, n. f. A money box.

They break up counters, doors and tills,

And leave the empty chests in view.

To TILL, prop. [til, Saxon.] To the time of.

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

To TILL, adv. To the present time.

Pleasure not known till now.

To TILL, then. To that time.

The earth till then was desert.

To TILL, conjunctio.

1. To the time.

Wood and rocks had ears

To rapture, till the savage clamour drown'd

Both harp and voice.

The unity of place we neither find in Aristotle, Horace, or any who have written of it, till in our age the French poets first made it a precept of the stage.

TIL

TILLYVALLY. } adj. [A word used formerly when any thing TILLYVALLY. } said was rejected as trifling or impertinent.
Am not I conflagrantious? am not I of her blood? Tilly- valley lady. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
Tillyvally, fir John, never tell me; your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. ii.
TILMAN. n. f. [til and man.] One who tills; an husband-
man.

Good shepherd, good tilman, good Jack and good Gil,
Makes husband and husband wife their coilers to fill. Tusser.
TILT. n. f. [tilt, Saxon.]

1. A tent; any covering over head.
The roof of linnen
Intended for a shelter!
But the rain made an ass
Of tilt and canvas.
And the snow which you know is a melter. Denham.

2. The cover of a boat.
It is a small vessel, like in proportion to a Gravesend tilt-boat. Sandys.

The rowing crew,
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.
3. A military game at which the combatants run against each other with lances on horseback.

His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves
Are brazen images of canonized faints. Shaksp. Henry IV.
He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and he never saw him but once in the tilt-yard, and then he broke his head. Shak. H. IV.
Images representing the forms of Hercules, Apollo, and Diana, he placed in the tilt-yard at Constantinople. Knolles.
The spouses of Hippolyte the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen. Dryden.
In tilts and tournaments the valiant strove,
By glorious deeds to purchase Emma's love. Prior.

4. A thrust.
His majesty seldom dismissed the foreigner till he had entertained him with the slaughter of two or three of his liege subjects, whom he very dextrously put to death with the tilt of his lance. Addison's Freeholder, N° 10.

To TILT, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover like a tilt of a boat.

2. To carry as in tilts or tournaments.

Ajax interposed
His sevenfold shield, and green'd Laertes' son,
When the insulting Trojans urg'd him fore
With tilted spears. Philips.

3. To point as in tilts.

Now horrid slaughter reigns,
Sons against fathers tilt the fatal lance,
Careless of duty, and their native grounds
Diffuse with kindred blood. Philips.

4. [Tillen, Dutch.] To turn up so as to run out.

To TILT, v. n.

1. To run in tilts.

To describe races and games,
Or tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields, Milton.

2. To fight with rapiers.

Friends all but even now; and then, but now—
Swords out and tilting one at other's breasts,
In opposition bloody. Shaksp. Othello.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chicken-hearted,
To fight the ladies first, and then be parted. Dryden.

It is not yet the fashion for women of quality to tilt. Collier.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a muck, and tilt at all I meet; Pope.

3. To rush as in combat.

Some say the spirits tilt so violently, that they make holes where they strike. Collier.

4. To play unsteadily.

The floating vessel swam
Uplifted; and secure with beaked prow
Rode tilting o'er the waves. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

The fleet swift tilting o'er the furlges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope's Odyssey.

5. To fall on one side.

As the trunk of the body is kept from tilting forward by the muscles of the back, so from falling backward by those of the belly. Grew's Cosmol. b. i.

TILT. n. f. [from tilt.] One who tills; one who fights.

A puffy tilter, that spurs his horse on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose. Shaksp. As you like it.

He us'd the only antique philtres,
Deriv'd from old heroic tilters. Hudibras, p. iii.

If war you chuse, and blood must needs be spilt here,
Let me alone to match your tilter. Granville.

TILTH. n. f. [from till.] Husbandry; culture.

Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none;
No tile of metal, corn, or wine, or oil. Shaksp. Tempest.

TIM

Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tim and husbandry. Shaksp.

TILTH. adj. [from till.] Arable; tilled.

He beheld a field,
Part arable and tilth; whereon he sheaves
New reap'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

TIMBER. n. f. [tymman, Saxon, to build.]

1. Wood fit for building.

I learn'd of lighter timber cotes to frame,
Such as might save my sheep and me from shame. Spenser.

For the body of the ships no nation doth equal England for the oaken timber wherewith to build them; but there must be a great providence used, that our ship timber be not unnecessarily wasted. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The straw was laid below,
Of chips and green wood was the second row; Dryden.

There are hardly any countries that are destitute of timber of their own growth.

Upon these walls they plant quick and timber trees, which thrive exceedingly. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Who set the twigs, shall he remember,
That is in haste to tell the timber? Prior.

2. The main trunk of a tree.

We take
From every tree, lop, bark, and part o' th' timber,
And though we leave it with a root thus hackt,
The air will drink the sap. Shaksp.

3. The main beams of a fabric.

4. Materials ironically.

Such dispositions are the very errors of human nature, and yet they are the fittest timber to make politicians of, like to knee timber, that is good for ships to be tossed, but not for houses that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To TIMBER, v. n. [from the noun.] To light on a tree. A cant word.

The one took up in a thicket of brush-wood, and the other timbered upon a tree hard by. LEStrange's Fables.

To TIMBER, v. a. To furnish with beams or timber.

TIMBERED, adj. [from timber; timbre, Fr.] Built; formed;
contrived.

He left the succession to his second son; not because he thought him the best timbered to support it. Watson.

Many heads that undertake learning were never squared nor timbered for it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

TIMBERSOW, n. f. A worm in wood.

Divers creatures, though they be somewhat loathsome to take, are of this kind; as earth worms, timbersaws, snails.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 692.

TIMBREL, n. f. [timbre, Fr. tympanum, Latin.] A kind of musical instrument played by pulsation.

The dancels they delight,
When they their timbreles imite, Spenser's Epithal.

And thereunto dance and carol sweet.
In their hands sweet timbreles all upheld on high. Id. R.

Praise with timbreles, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins and lutes. Sandys's Paraph.

For her through Egypt's fruitful clime renown'd,
Let weeping Nilus bear the timbrele found. Pope's Statius.

TIME. n. f. [tama, Saxon; tym, Eric.]

1. The measure of duration.

This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochs, is that which most properly we call time. Locke.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps the incomer. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day. Shaksp.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a great exhalation, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

Time, which consisteth of parts, can be no part of infinite duration, or of eternity; for then there would be infinite time past to day, which to morrow will be more than infinite.
Time is therefore one thing, and infinite duration is another.

2. Space of time.

Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation. Dan. ii. 16.

He for the time remain'd stupidly good.

No time is allowed for digestions.

3. Interval.

Pomanders, and knots of powders, you may have continually in your hand; whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 929.

4. Season; proper time.

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose. Ecclesi. iii. 1.

TIM

They were cut down out of time, whose foundation was overflown with a flood. Job xxix. 16.

He found nothing but leaves on it; for the time of figs was not yet. Mar. xi. 13.

Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep. Rom. xiii. 11.

Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime
Of youth her lord expir'd before his time. Dryden.

I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least, to save your fortune and your honour! Dryden.

Take heed you steer your vessel right.
The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our evil ways to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Cadamy's Sermons.

5. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.

Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:
And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment. Dryden's Jernial.

In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection. Locke.

One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is flowered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time bury all things under-ground. Woodward.

I have resolv'd to take time, and, in spite of all misfortunes, to write you, at intervals, a long letter. Swift.

6. Age; particular part of time.

When that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men. Nam. xxvi. 10.

They shall be given into his hand until a time and times.

If we should impute the heat of the season unto the cooperation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the conflagration of
leo. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden's Dufresney.

7. Past time.

I was the man in th' moon when time was. Shaksp.

8. Early time.

Stanley at Bosworth field, though he came time enough to save his life, yet he staid long enough to endanger it. Bacon.

If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to fat about these duties. Rogers.

The earl lost no time, but march'd day and night. Clarend.

He continued his delights till all the enemies horie were pass'd through his quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. Clarendon, b. viii.

Time is lost, which never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature. Dryden's Virgil.

10. Particular quality of the present.

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky. Shaksp.

All the prophets in their age, the times
Of great Messiah sing. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

If any reply, that the times and manners of men will not bear such a practice, that is an answer from the mouth of a proffessed time-server. South's Sermons.

11. Particular time.

Give order, that no sort of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. Shaksp.

The worst on me must light, when time shall be. Milt.

A time will come when my maturer muse,
In Caesar's war a nobler theme shall chuse. Dryden.

These reservoirs of snow they cut, distributing them to several shops, that from time to time supply Naples. Addison.

12. Hour of childbirth.

She intended to stay till delivered; for she was within one month of her time. Clarendon.

The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these peri-coats, I blamed her for walking abroad when she was so near her time; but soon I found all the modish part of the sex as far gone as herself. Addison's Spect. N° 127.

13. Repetition of any thing, or mention with reference to repetition.

Four times he cross'd the car of night. Milton.

Keep time with their own trumpet's measure. Prior.

And yield them most excessive pleasure.

To TIME, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adapt to the time; to bring or do at a proper time.

There is no greater wisdom than well to time the beginnings and onsets of things. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The timing of things is a main point in the dispatch of all affairs. L'Estrange.

This 'tis to have a virtue out of season.

Mercy is good, but kings mistake its timing. Dryden.

A man's conviction should be strong, and so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it. Add.

2. To regulate as to time.

To the same purpose old Epopeus spoke,
Who overlook'd the oars, and tim'd the stroke. Addison.

3. To measure harmonically.

He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd with dying cries. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

TIMELY. adj. [time and full.] Seasonable; timely; early.

If this arch-politician find in his pupils any remorse, any feeling of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men souls, that he will accept them at any times, and upon any condition; interrupting, by his vigilant endeavours, all offer of timely return towards God. Raleigh's Hist. of the World, b. i.

TIMELINESS. adj. [from time.]

1. Unseasonable; done at an improper time.

Nor fits it to prolong the heav'nly feast
Timely, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Untimely; immature; done before the proper time.

A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,
If unprevented, to your timely grave. Shaksp.

Noble Glotter's death,
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timely end. Shaksp. Rich. II.

TIMELY. adj. [from time.] Seasonable; sufficiently early.

The West glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To g in the timely inn. Shaksp. Macbeth.

per. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TIMOROUS. adj. [timor, Latin.] Fearful; full of fear and scruple.

Prepossessed heads will ever doubt it, and timorous beliefs will never dare to try it. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. ii.

The infant flames, whilst yet they were conceal'd
In tim'rous doubts, with pity I beheld;
With easy smiles dispell'd the silent fear,
That dust not tell me what I dy'd to hear. Prior.

TIMOROUSLY. adv. [from timorous.] Fearfully; with much fear.

We would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and tim'rously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons. Shaksp.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, and metal from wood, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms which should pretend to signify their real essences.

Let dastard souls be timorously wise:
But tell them, Pyrrhus knows not how to form
Far-fancy'd ills, and dangers out of light.

TIMOROUSNESS. n. f. [from timor.] Fearfulness.
The clergy, through the timorosity of many among them, were refused to be heard by their council.

TIMOUS. adj. [from time.] Early; timely; not innate.
By a wife and timous inquisition, the peccant humours and humours must be discovered, purged, or cut off.

TIN. n. f. [from tin, Dutch.]
1. One of the primitive metals called by the chemists juniper.

Quicksilver, lead, iron, and tin, have opacity or blackness.
Tin ore sometimes holds about one-sixth of tin. Woodward.

To TIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with tin.
To keep the earth from getting into the vessel, he employed a plate of iron tinned over and perforated.

The cover may be tinned over only by nailing of single tin plates over it.
New tinning a saucepan is chargeable.

TINICAL. n. f. A mineral.
The tinical of the Persians seems to be the chrysocolla of the ancients, and what our borax is made of.

To TINCT. v. a. [from tinctus, Lat. tinct, Fr.]
1. To stain; to colour; to dye.
Some bodies have a more deperible nature than others in colouration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a very great quantity of wine.

Some were tinted blue, some red, others yellow.
I distilled some of the tinted liquor, and all that came over was as limpid as rock water.

Those who have preserved an innocence, would not suffer the whiter parts of their soul to be discoloured or tinted by the reflection of one sin.

To imbue with a tincture.
We have artificial wells made in imitation of the natural, as tinted upon vitriol, sulphur, and steel.

TINCT. n. f. [from the verb.] Colour; stain; spot.
That great medicine hath
With his tinct gilded thee.

The purple streaming amethyst is thine.
The first scent of a vessel lasts, and the tinct the wool first appears of.

TINCTURE. n. f. [from tinctura, Fr. tinctura from tinctus, Lat.]
1. Colour or taste superadded by something.
The fight must be sweetly deceived by an insensible passage from bright colours, to dimmer, which Italian artificers call the middle tinctures.

Hence the morning planet gilds her horn,
By tincture or reflection they augment
Their small peculiar.

'Tis the fate of princes that no knowledge
Come pure to them, but passing through the eyes
And ears of other men, it takes a tincture
From every channel.

That beloved thing engrosses him, and, like a coloured glass before his eyes, casts its own colour and tincture upon all the images of things.

To begin the practice of an art with a light tincture of the rules, is to expose ourselves to the scorn of those who are judges.

Malignant tempers, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural tincture of mind.

Few in the next generation who will not write and read, and have an early tincture of religion.

Sire of her joy and source of her delight;
O! wing'd with pleasure take thy happy flight,
And give each future morn a tincture of thy white.

All manners take a tincture from our own,
Or come discoloured through our passions shown.

Have a care lest some darling science so far prevail over your mind, as to give a sovereign tincture to all your other studies, and discolour all your ideas.

Extract of some drug made in spirits; an infusion.
In tinctures drawn from vegetables, the superfluous spirit of wine distilled off leaves the extract of the vegetable.

To TINCTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To imbue or impregnate with some colour or taste.
The bright sun compacts the precious stone,
Imparting radiant lustre like his own:

He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue.
A little black paint will tincture and spoil twenty gay colours.

To imbue the mind.

Early were our minds tinctured with a distinguishing sense of good and evil; early were the seeds of a divine love, and holy fear of offending, sown in our hearts.

To TIND. v. a. [from tind, Gothick; tentan, Saxon.] To kindle; to set on fire.
TINDER. n. f. [from tind, Gothick; tentan, Saxon.] Any thing eminently inflammable placed to catch fire.

Strike on the tinder ho!
Give me a taper.
To these shameless pastimes were their youth admitted,

Where sparks and fire do meet with tinder.
Those sparks more fire will still engender.
Whoever our trading with England would hinder,
To inflame both the nations do plainly contrive;

Because Irish linen will soon turn to tinder,
And wool it is greasy, and quickly takes fire.
TINDERBOX. n. f. [from tinder and box.] The box for holding tinder.

That worthy patriot, once the bellows,
And tinderbox of all his fellows.
He might even as well have employed his time in catching moles, making lanterns and tinderboxes.

TINE. n. f. [from tine, Saxon.]
1. The tooth of a harrow; the spike of a fork.
In the southern parts of England they destroy moles by traps that fall on them, and strike sharp tines or teeth through them.

Trouble; distress.
The root whereof, and tragical effect,
Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfullest muse of mine,
That won't the tragick stage for to direct,
In funeral complaints and wailful tine.

To TINE. v. a. [from tine, Saxon.]
1. To kindle; to light; to set on fire.
Strifeless Tine in their stubborn mind
Coals of contention and hot vengeance tine.

The clouds
Jussling or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the slant light'ning; whose thwart flame driv'n down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir.

The priest with holy hands was seen to tine
The cloven wood, and pour the ruddy wine.
To TINE. v. n.
1. To rage; to smart.
2. To fight.

Eden stain'd with blood of many a band
Of Scots and English both, that tined on his strand.

To TINGE. v. a. [from tinge, Lat.] To impregnate or imbue with a colour or taste.
Sir Roger is something of an humourist; and his virtues as well as imperfections are tinged by a certain extravagance, which makes them particularly his.

A red powder mixed with a little blue, or a blue with a little red, doth not presently lose its colour; but a white powder mixed with any colour is presently tinged with that colour, and is equally capable of being tinged with any colour whatever.

If the eye be tinged with any colour, as in the jaundice, so as to tinge pictures in the bottom of the eye with that colour, all objects appear tinged with the same colour.

Still says some useful bile aside,
Ere we should want both gibe and satire,
And all be burst with pure good-nature.
The infusions of rhubarb and saffron tinge the urine with a high yellow.

TINGENT. adj. [from tingens, Lat.] Having the power to tinge.
This wood, by the tincture it afforded, appeared to have its coloured part genuine; but as for the white part, it appears much less enriched with the tingent property.

TINGLASS. n. f. [from tingl, Dutch.]
To TINGLE. v. n. [from tingelen, Dutch.]
1. To feel a sound, or the continuance of a sound, in the ears.
This is perhaps rather tingle.

When our ear tingles, we usually say that somebody is talking of us; which is an ancient conceit.

To feel a sharp quick pain with a sensation of motion.
The pale boy tenator yet tingling stands.

To feel either pain or pleasure with a sensation of motion.
The sense of this word is not very well ascertained.

They suck pollution through their tingling veins.
In a palsy, sometimes the sensation or feeling is either totally abolished, or dull with a sense of tingling.

To TINK. v. n. [from tinnis, Latin; tincian, Welsh.] To make a sharp shrill noise.
TINKER. n. f. [from tink, because their way of proclaiming their trade is to beat a kettle, or because in their tink they make a tinkling noise.] A mender of old brass.

Am not I old Sly's son, by education a cardmaker, and now by present profession a tinker.

It seems to have been improperly used by Pope.
The wand'ring streams that shine between the hills,
The grotts that echo to the tinkling rills.

To hear a low quick noise.
With deeper brown the grove was overpread,
A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears tinkled, and the colour fled.

TINMAN. n. f. [from tin and man.] A manufacturer of tin, or iron tinned over.
Didst thou never pop
Thy head into a tinman's shop?

A certain customary duty anciently paid to the tithingmen.
An insect.
One who works in the tin mines.

The Cornish men, many of them could for a need live under-ground, that were timners.
A kind of shining cloth.

A tinseil veil her amber locks did throw'd,
That thro' to cover what it could not hide,
Is but a night-gown in respect of your's; cloth of gold and cuts, underborne with a bluish tinseil.

By Thetis' tinseil slipper'd feet,
And the fongs of Irens sweet.
Any thing shining with false lustre; any thing showy and of little value.

For favours cheap and common who would strive;
Yet scatter'd here and there I some behold,
Who can discern the tinseil from the gold?

If the man will too curiously examine the superficial tinseil good, he undecieves himself to his own cost.
No glittering tinseil of May fair,
Could with this rod of Sid compare.

Ye tinseil insects, whom a court maintains,
That counts your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eyes of day,
The male's wing shall brush you all away.

To TINSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with cheap ornaments; to adorn with lustre that has no value.
Hence you phantastick posseters in song,
My text defeats your art, 'tis nature's tongue,
Scorns all her tinseil'd metaphors of self,
Illustrated by pictures but herself.

She, tinseil'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-applause her wild creation views,
Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,
And with her own fool's colours gilds them all.

To TINT. v. a. [from tinte, Fr. tinta, Ital.] A dye; a colour.
Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beauteous tint the colour'd mists,
And from the canvas call the mimic face.

TINY. adj. [from tiny, Danish.] Little; small; puny. A ludicrous word.
Some pigeons, Davys, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws.

When that I was a little tiny boy,
A foolish thing was but a toy.
But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves,
On little females and on little loves;
Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse,
The baby playthings that adorn thy house.

To TIP. v. n. [from tip, Dutch.] Top; end; point; extremity.
The tip no jewel needs to wear,
The tip is jewel of the ear.
They touch the beard with the tip of their tongue, and wet it.

Thrice upon thy fingers tip,
Thrice upon thy rubied tip.
All the pleasure dwells upon the tip of his tongue.

She has fifty private amours, which nobody yet knows any thing of but herself, and thirty clandestine marriages that have not been touched by the tip of the tongue.

- In all those wars there were few tiremees, most of them being of one tire of oats of fifty banks. Arbutnot.
2. [Corrupted from tior or tiara, or attire.] A head-dress.
On her head she wore a tire of gold, Fairy Queen.
Adorn'd with gems and ouches,
Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shakespeare.
The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark flame, the tire
That crowns his hated head on high, appears. Crasshaw.
When the fury took her stand on high,
A his from all the snaky tire went round. Pope.
3. Furniture; apparatus.
Saint George's worth

- To TIRE. v. a. [tiran, Saxon.]
1. To fatigue; to make weary; to harass; to wear out with labour or tediousness.
Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past,
From pray'rs to wishes he defends at last. Dryden.
For this a hundred voices I desire,
To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire;
Yet never could be worthily expell,
How deeply thou art teard in my breast. Dryden's Persius.
2. It has often out added to intend the signification.
Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate. Bacon's Essays.
- A lonely way
The cheerless Albion wander'd half a day;
Tir'd out, at length a spreading stream he 'spy'd. Tickell.
3. [From attire or tire, from tiara.] To dress the head.
Jezebel painted her face and tired her head. 2 Kings ix. 30.
- To TIRE. v. n. [teonnan, Saxon.] To fail with weariness.
- TYREDNESS. n. f. [from tired.] State of being tired; weariness.
- It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence that it hath not satisfied us boundedly. Hakewill on Providence.
- TYRESOME. adj. [from tire.] Wearisome; fatiguing; tedious.
- Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and pertinent digression. Addison.
- Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those critics who write in a dogmatick way, without language, genius, or imagination. Addison's Spect. No. 253.
- TYRESOMENESS. n. f. [from tiresome.] Act or quality of being tiresome.

We'll try the empire you so long have boasted;
And if we are not prais'd, we'll not be toasted. Prior.
- TOAST, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Bread dried before the fire.
You are both as rheumatick as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's confinities. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
Every third day take a small toast of manchete, dipped in oil of sweet almonds new drawn, and sprinkled with loaf sugar. Bacon's Physical Remains.
2. Bread dried and put into liquor.
Where's then the faucy boat
Co-rival'd greatness? or to harbour fled,
Or made a toast for Neptune? Shakespeare, Troil. and Cressida.
Some inquire, perhaps, you take delight to rack;
Whose game is whilk, whose treat a toast in sack. Pope.
3. A celebrated woman whose health is often drunk.
I shall likewise mark out every toast, the club in which the was elected, and the number of votes that were on her side. Addison's Guard. N. 107.
Say, why are beauties prais'd and honour'd most,
The wife man's passion, and the vain man's toast?
Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford,
Why angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd?
TOASTER. n. f. [from toast.] He who toasts.
We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry faucy ill-bred fellow Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
- TOBACCO. n. f. [from Tobacco or Tobago in America.]
The flower of the tobacco consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and divided at the top into five deep segments, which expand like a star; the ovary becomes an oblong roundish membranaceous fruit, which is divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, and is filled with small roundish seeds. Miller.
It is a planet now I see;
And, if I err not, by his proper
Figure, that's like a tobacco-slopper. Hudibras, p. ii.
Bread or tobacco may be neglected; but reason at first recommends their trial, and custom makes them pleasant. Locke.
Salts are to be drained out of the clay by water, before it be fit for the making tobacco-pipes or bricks. Woodward.
- TOBACCONIST. n. f. [from tobacco.] A preparer and vender of tobacco.
TON. n. f. [totte haar, a lock of hair, German. Skinner. I believe rightly.]

TOI

1. A bush; a thick shrub.
Within the ivie toi,
There shrouded was the little god; Spenser's Pastoral.
I heard a busy buffling.
2. A certain weight of wool, twenty eight pounds.
Every eleven weather toi, every toi yields a pound and odd shillings. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
- TOE. n. f. [ta, Saxon; teen, Dutch.] The divided extremities of the feet; the fingers of the feet.
Come all you spirits,
And fill me from the crown to th' toe, topful
Of direct cruelty. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Sport that wrinkled care derides,
And laughter holding both his sides;
Come and trip it as you go,
On the light fantastick toe.
Last to enjoy her sense of feeling,
A thousand little nerves she sends Quite to our toes, and fingers ends. Prior.
- TOFORE. adv. [topon, Saxon.] Before. Obsolete.
It is an epilogue to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been said. Shak.
So shall they depart the manor with the corn and the bacon
tofore him that hath won it. Spectator, N. 607.
- TOFT. n. f. [toftum, law Latin.] A place where a meassage has stood. Cowel and Anf.
- TOGED. adj. [togatus, Lat.] Gowned; dressed in gowns.
Wherein the tog'd consuls can propose
As matter as he; meer prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldierhip. Shakespeare's Othello.
- TOGETHER. adv. [togethe, Saxon.]
1. In company.
We turn'd o'er many books together. Shakespeare.
Both together went into the wood. Milton.
2. Not apart; not in separation.
That king joined humanity and policy together. Bacon.
3. In the same place.
She lodgeth heat and cold, and moist and dry,
And life and death, and peace and war together. Davies.
4. In the same time.
While he and I live together, I shall not be thought the worst poet. Dryden.
5. Without intermission.
The Portuguese expected his return for almost an age together after the battle. Dryden.
They had a great debate concerning the punishment of one of their admirals, which lasted a month together. Addison.
6. In concert.
The subject is his confederacy with Henry the eighth, and the wars they made together upon France. Addison on Italy.
7. In continuity.
Some tree's broad leaves together few'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round. Milton.
8. TOGETHER with. In union with; in a state of mixture with.
Take the bad together with the good. Dryden's Juvenal.
- TO TOIL. v. n. [tihan, Saxon; tylen, Dutch.] To labour;
perhaps originally, to labour in tillage.
This Percy was the man nearest my soul;
Who, like a brother, toil'd in my affairs,
And laid his love and life under my foot. Shakespeare.
Others ill-fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life, and mourn their purpose blasted
With fruitless act. Prior.
He views the main that ever toils below. Thomson.
- TO TOIL. v. a.
1. To labour; to work at.
Toil'd out my uncouth passage, forc'd to ride. Milton.
Th' untractable abyss.
2. To weary; to overlabour.
Then, toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy. Shakespeare's Richard II.
- TOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Labour; fatigue.
They live to their great, both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed. Hooker, l. v.
Not to irkome toil, but to delight
He made us. Milton.
2. [Toile, toiles, Fr. tela, Latin.] Any net or snare woven or meshed.
She looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
He had so placed his horsemen and footmen in the woods, that he shut up the Christians as it were in a toil. Knaples.
All great spirits
Bear great and sudden change with such impatience
As a Numidian lion, when first caught,
Endures the toil that holds him. Denham's Sophy.
A fly falls into the toil of a spider. L'Estrange.
Fantastick honour, thou hast fram'd a toil
Thyself, to make thy love thy virtues spoil. Dryden.

TOL

- TÓILET. n. f. [toilette, Fr.] A dressing table.
The merchant from the exchange returns in peace,
And the long labours of the toilet cease. Pope.
- TÓILSOME. n. f. [from toil.] Laborious; weary.
This were it toilsome, yet with thee were sweet. Milton.
While here we dwell,
What can be toilsome in these pleasant walks? Milton.
Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,
A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear;
Recall those nights that clos'd thy toilsome days,
Still hear thy Parnel in his living lays. Pope.
- TÓILSOMENESS. n. f. [from toilsome.] Wearisomeness; laboriousness.
- TÓKEN. n. f. [tokens, Gothick; racn, Saxon; toeycken, Dutch.]
1. A sign.
Shew me a token for good, that they which hate me may see it. Psalm lxxxvi. 17.
2. A mark.
Whereforever you see ingratitude, you may as infallibly conclude, that there is a growing flock of ill-nature in that breast, as you may know that man to have the plague upon whom you see the tokens. South's Sermons.
3. A memorial of friendship; an evidence of remembrance.
Here is a letter from queen Hecuba,
A token from her daughter, my fair love. Shakespeare.
Whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend. Shakespeare.
Pigwigen gladly would commend
Some token to queen Mab to fend,
Were worthy of her wearing. Drayton's Nymphid.
- TÓKEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make known. Not in use.
What in time proceeds,
May token to the future our past deeds. Shakespeare.
- TOLD. pret. and part. pass. of tell. Mentioned; related.
The acts of God to human ears
Cannot, without process of speech, be told. Milton.
- TÓLE. v. a. [This seems to be some barbarous provincial word.] To train; to draw by degrees.
Whatever you observe him to be more frightened at than he should, tell him on, to by insensible degrees, till at last he masters the difficulty. Locke.
- TÓLERABLE. adj. [tolerable, Fr. tolérable, Lat.]
1. Supportable; that may be endured or supported.
Yourself, who have fought them, ye to excuse, as that ye would have men to think ye judge them not allowable, but tolerable only, and to be borne with, for the furtherance of your purposes, till the corrupt estate of the church may be better reformed. Hooker.
It shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment than for that city. Mat. x. 15.
Cold and heat scarce tolerable. Milton.
There is nothing of difficulty in the external performance, but what hypocritically can make tolerable to itself. Tillotson.
2. Not excellent; not contemptible; passable.
The reader may be assured of a tolerable translation. Dryden.
Princes have it in their power to keep a majority on their side by any tolerable administration, till provoked by continual oppressions. Swift.
- TÓLERABLENESS. n. f. [from tolerable.] The state of being tolerable.
- TÓLERABLY. adv. [from tolerable.]
1. Supportably; in a manner that may be endured.
2. Passably; neither well nor ill; moderately well.
Sometimes are found in these laxer strata bodies that are still tolerably firm. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iii.
The person to whom this head belonged laughed frequently, and on particular occasions had acquitted himself tolerably at a ball. Addison's Spect. N° 275.
- TÓLERANCE. n. f. [tolerantia, Lat. tolerance, Fr.] Power of enduring; act of enduring.
Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him: Plato passing by, and knowing he did it to be seen, said, if you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself. Bacon's Apophth.
There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and blessed eternally. Hammond's Fundamental.
- TÓLERATE. v. a. [tolere, Lat. tolerare, Fr.] To allow to as not to hinder; to suffer.
Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue; their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while. Hooker, b. iv.
We shall tolerate flying horses, harpies, and satyrs; for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralities requite their substantial fallacies. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

TOM

- Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin. Decay of Piety.
Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.
We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, but not that they will tolerate us. Swift.
- TÓLERA'TION. n. f. [tolere, Latin.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.
I shall not speak against the indulgence and toleration granted to these men. South's Sermons.
- TÓLL. n. f. [This word seems derived from tolle, Lat. toll, Saxon; tol, Dutch; told, Danish; toll, Welsh; taille, Fr.] An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.
Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market; secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage. Cowel.
Empton and Dudley the people esteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took toll of their matter's grift. Bac.
The fame Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine. Arbutnot.
- TÓ TOLL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To pay toll or tallage.
I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for him; for this I'll none of him. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.
Where, when, by whom, and what y' were sold for,
And in the open market toll'd for? Hudibras, p. ii.
2. To take toll or tallage.
The meale the more yeeldeth, if servant be true,
And miller that tolleth takes none but his due. Tupper.
3. [I know not whence derived.] To found as a single bell.
The first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a fullen bell, Remember'd tolling a departed friend. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Our going to church at the tolling of a bell, only tells us the time when we ought to go to worship God. Stillingfleet.
- TOLL. n. f.
Gentle bell, for the foul
Of the pure ones. Denham.
You love to hear of some prodigious tale,
The bell that toll'd alone, or fifth whale. Dryden.
They give their bodies due repose at night:
When hollow murmurs of their evening bells
Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them to their cells. Dry.
All the bells toll'd in different notes. Pope.
With horns and trumpets now to madnes swell,
Now sink in forrows with a tolling bell. Pope's Dunciad.
The maid asks who the bell toll'd for? Swift.
- TÓ TOLL. v. a. [tollo, Lat.]
1. To ring a bell.
When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the fame is known to the hearers. Gram.
2. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long. An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tolls the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.
3. To take away. Obsolete.
- TÓLLAGE. n. f. [toll and booth.] A prison. Inf.
- TÓ TOLLBOOTH. v. a. To imprison in a tollbooth.
To these what did he give? why a hen,
That they might tollbooth Oxford men. Bishop Corbet.
- TÓLLGATHERER. n. f. [toll and gather.] The officer that takes toll. Dist.
- TÓLSEY. n. f. The game with tollbooth. Dist.
- TÓLUTA'TION. n. f. [tolute, Latin.] The act of pacing or ambling.
They move per latere, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tolutation or ambling. Brown's Vulgar Err.
Whether tolutation or succulation. Butler.
- TÓMB. n. f. [tombe, tombau, Fr. tumba, low Lat.] A monument in which the dead are enclosed.
Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.
Time is drawn upon tombs an old man bald, winged, with a fithe and an hour-glass. Peacocks on Drawing.
Poor heart! she slumbers in her silent tomb,
Let her possess in peace that narrow room.
The secret wound with which I bleed
Shall lie wrapt up, ev'n in my herse.
But on my tomb-stone thou shalt read
My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.
- TÓ TOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bury; to entomb.
Souls of boys were there,
And youths, that tomb'd before their parents were. May.

TON

- TÓMBLESS. adj. [from tomb.] Wanting a tomb; wanting a sepulchral monument.
Lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them. Shakespeare.
- TÓMBROY. n. f. [Tom a diminutive of Thom, and boy.] A mean fellow; sometimes a wild coarse girl.
A lady
Faster'd to an empery, to be partner'd
With tombroys, hir'd with that self-exhibition Which your own coffers yield! Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
- TÓME. n. f. [Fr. tomé.]
1. One volume of many.
2. A book.
All those venerable books of scripture, all those sacred tones and volumes of holy writ, are with such absolute perfection framed. Hooker.
- TÓMTIT. n. f. [See TITMOUSE.] A timouse; a small bird.
You would fancy him a giant when you looked upon him, and a tomtit when you shut your eyes. Spektor.
- TÓN. n. f. [tonne, Fr. See TUN.] A measure or weight.
Spain was very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to fire, sink, and carry away, ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.
- TÓN. n. f. [ton, Fr. tonus, Lat.]

TOO

2. It is sometimes doubled to encrease its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside. Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt. Shakespeare. Sometimes it would be full, and then Oh! too too soon decrease again; Eclips'd sometimes, that 'twould so fall, There would appear no hope at all. Suckling.

3. Likewise; also. See what a scourge is laid upon your hate; And I, for winking at your discords too, Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet. Let on my cup no wars be found, Left those incite to quarrels too, Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham.

The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other mens sins, is evident from the text and from experience too. South's Sermons. It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke.

Let those eyes that view The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope. Took, the prerogative, and sometimes the participial passive of take.

Thy soldiers All levied in my name, have in my name Took their discharge. Shakespeare. King Lear. He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. South's Sermons. Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepared. Dryden. The same device enclosed the affines of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took, though at first it received its rise from such a particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Addison.

This took up some of his hours every day. Spekator. The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's hunsmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all. Swift.

Leaving Polybus, I took my way To Cyrrha's temple. Pope's Statius.

TOOL. n. f. [tool, tool, Saxon.]

1. Any instrument of manual operation. In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little it will come forth; but if you pierce it deeper with a tool it will be dry. Bacon.

Arm'd with such gard'ning tools as art, yet rude, Guileless of fire had form'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison.

2. A hiring; a wretch who acts at the command of another. He'd choose

To talk with wits in dirty shoes; And scorn the tools with stars and garters, So often seen carolling Charters. Swift.

TO TOOT. v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation: perhaps toot, Saxon, contracted from topecan, to know or examine.] To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and sily. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete. I cast to go a shooting.

Long wand'ring up and down the land, With bow and bolts on either hand, For birds and bushes tooting. Spenser's Poet.

TOOTH. n. f. plural teeth. [tooth, Saxon; tand, Dutch.]

The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; they are formed in the cavities of the jaws, and about the seventh or eighth month after birth they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw, tear the perioosteum and gums, which being very sensible create a violent pain: the dentes incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw, because they are the thinnest and the sharpest; after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders, because they are thickest and bluntest: about the seventh year of age they are thrust out by new teeth which then begin to sprout, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have been observed to shed their teeth twice: about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sapientie.

Avaunt, you curs! Be thy mouth or black or white, Shakespeare. King Lear. Teeth that poison if it bite. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.

Desert deserves with characters of brass A fortified residence against the teeth of time, And razure of oblivion. Shakespeare.

The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unlight length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out. Ray on the Creation.

TOO

2. Taste; palate. These are not dishes for thy dainty teeth; What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth? Why stand'st thou picking? Dryden.

3. A fine, prong, or blade, of any multifid instrument. The priests servant came while the flesh was in feeding, with a flesh hook of three teeth. Sam. ii. 13. I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whole teeth, being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide. Newton's Opticks.

4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies. The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge. Mason. In clocks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you clog them with never so much weight; but apply a little oil they whirl about very swiftly with the tenth part of the force. Ray.

5. TOOTH and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence. A lion and bear were at teeth and nail which should carry off a fawn. Leffrange's Fables.

6. To the TEETH. In open opposition. It warms the very tickles in my heart, That I shall live and tell him to his teeth, Thus diddest thou. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The action lies In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd, Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults, To give in evidence. Shakespeare.

The way to our horses lies back again by the house, and then we shall meet 'em full in the teeth. Dryden.

7. To cast in the TEETH. To insult by open exprobration. A wife body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him therewith in the teeth, saying, were it not for me thou wouldst freeze, and not be able to heat thyself. Hooker, b. iv.

8. In spite of the teeth. Notwithstanding threats expressed by shewing teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence. The guiltness of my mind drove the grossness of the teeth into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare.

The only way is not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth. Leffrange.

To TOOTH. v. a. [from tooth.]

1. To furnish with teeth; to indent. Then faws were tooth'd, and founding axes made. Dryden.

The point hooked down like that of an eagle; and both the edges toothed, as in the Indian crow. Grew's Museum. Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger and toothed at the end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To lock in each other. It is common to teeth in the stretching course two inches with the stretch only. Morton's Mech. Exercise.

TOOTHACH. n. f. [tooth and ach.] Pain in the teeth. There never yet was the philosopher That could endure the toothach patiently, However at their ease they talk'd like gods. Shakespeare.

He that sleeps feels not the toothach. Shakespeare. Cymbeline. I have the toothach.

—What, sigh for the toothach? Which is but an humour or a worm. Shakespeare. One was grown desperate with the toothach. Temple.

TOOTHDRAWER. n. f. [tooth and draw.] One whose business is to extract painful teeth. Nature with Scots, as toothdrawers, hath dealt, Who use to string their teeth upon their belt. Gloucester.

When the teeth are to be dislocated, a toothdrawer is consulted. Wise's Surgery.

TOOTHED. adj. [from tooth.] Having teeth. TOOTHLESS. adj. [from tooth.] Wanting teeth; deprived of teeth.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheek she draws, Sunk are her eyes, and teethless are her jaws. Dryden. They are fed with flesh minced small, having not only a sharp head and snout, but a narrow and teethless snout. Ray.

TOOTHPICK. n. f. [tooth and pick.] An instrument by which the teeth are cleaned from any thing sticking between them. I will fetch you a toothpicker from the farthest inch of Asia. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.

He and his toothpick at my worship's meals. Shakespeare. Preserve my woods, whereof, if this course hold, there will hardly be found in some places enough to make a toothpick. Heaven's England's Tears.

Lentick excels; if toothpicks of the lentick be wanting, of a quill then make a toothpick. Sandys.

Lentick excels; if toothpicks of the lentick be wanting, of a quill then make a toothpick. Lentick.

TOP

Lentice is a beautiful ever-green, and makes the best toothpick. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TOOTHsome. adj. [from tooth.] Palatable; pleasing to the taste. Some are good to be eaten while young, but nothing toothsome as they grow old. Carew.

TOOTHsomeness. n. f. [from toothsome.] Pleasantness to the taste. TOOTHwort. n. f. [dentaria, Lat.] A plant.

The toothwort hath a fleshy root, which is scaly, and cut in, as it were, with teeth: the flower consists of four leaves, placed in form of a cross; this is succeeded by a long pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, and when ripe twisted up like a screw, and discharges the seeds with violence. Miller.

Top. n. f. [topp, Welsh; top, Saxon; top, Dutch and Danish; topp, a crest, flandick.]

1. The highest part of any thing. I should not see the sandy hour-glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats, And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand, Vailing her high top lower than her ribs. Shakespeare.

He wears upon his baby brow the round And top of sovereignty. Shakespeare. Macbeth. Here Sodom's towers raise their proud tops on high, The tow'rs as well as men outbrave the sky. Cauley.

Thou nor on the top of old Olympus dwell'st. Milton. That government which takes in the content of the greatest number of the people, may justly be said to have the broadest bottom; and if it terminate in the authority of one single person, it may be said to have the narrowest top, and so makes the firmest pyramid. Temple.

Sylphus no sooner carries his stone up to the top of the hill but it tumbles to the bottom. Addison.

So up the steep hill with pain The weighty stone is row'd in vain; Which having touch'd the top recoils, And leaves the labourer to renew his toils. Granville.

Marine bodies are found upon hills, and at the bottom only such as have fallen down from their tops. Woodward.

2. The surface; the superficies. Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth hurt all things that grow by them, especially such trees as spread their roots near the top of the ground. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear, The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

3. The highest place. He that will not let himself proudly at the top of all things, but will consider the immensity of this fabric, may think, that in other mansions there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

What must he expect when he seeks for preferment, but universal opposition, when he is mounting the ladder, and every hand ready to turn him off when he is at the top? Swift.

4. The highest person. How would you be, If he, which is the top of judgment, should But judge you as you are? Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

5. The utmost degree. Zeal being the top and perfection of so many religious affections, the causes of it must be most eminent. Sprat. If you attain the top of your desires in fame, all those who envy you will do you harm; and of those who admire you few will do you good. Pope.

6. The top of my ambition is to contribute to that work. Pope. The top of my ambition is to contribute to that work. Pope.

7. The crown of the head. All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall On her ingrateful top! Shakespeare. King Lear. Arm'd, say you? —Arm'd, my lord. Shakespeare.

8. The hair on the crown of the head; the forelock. Let's take the infant by the forward top; For we are old, and on our quick fit decrees Th'inaudible and noiseless foot of time Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

9. The head of a plant. The buds made our food are called heads or tops; as cabbage heads. Watts's Logick.

10. [Top, Danish.] An inverted conoid which children set to turn on the point, continuing its motion with a whip. Since I pluck geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Shakespeare.

TOP

For as whipp'd tops, and handied balls, The learned hold, are animals: So horses they affirm to be. Hudibras, p. i.

As young striplings whip the top for sport On the smooth pavement of an empty court, The wooden engine flies and whirls about, Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

Still humming on their drowsy course they keep, And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

A top may be used with propriety in a similitude by a Virgil, when the sun may be dishonoured by a Mævius. Broomer.

11. Top is sometimes used as an adjective to express lying on the top, or being at the top. The top stones laid in clay are kept together. Mortimer.

TO TOSSE v. n.
1. To fling; to winch; to be in violent commotion.
Dire was the teffing deep the groans I despair
Tended the sick, buffet from couch to couch. Milton.
Galen tells us of a woman patient of his whom he found very weak in bed, continually teffing and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her rest.
To teff and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain.
And thou, my fire, not defin'd by thy birth
To turn to dust and mix with common earth,
How wilt thou teff and mix, and long to die,
And quit thy claim to immortality. Addison's Ovid.
2. To be tossed.
Your mind is teffing on the sea,
There where your agonies
Do overpeer the petty traffickers.
3. To Toss up. To throw a coin into the air, and wager on what side it shall fall.
I'd try if any pleasure could be found,
In teffing up for twenty thousand pound. Brampton.
